

GOVERNMENT OF INDIA

ARCHÆOLOGICAL SURVEY OF INDIA

CENTRAL ARCHÆOLOGICAL LIBRARY

ACCESSION NO. 543

CALL No. 294.1/Har.

D.G.A. 79

RGVEDIC LEGENDS
THROUGH THE AGES

1033

By

H. L. HARIYAPPA, M.A., Ph.D. (Bombay)

Assistant Professor of Sanskrit, Mysore University, Mysore; Editor, Poona Orientalist.

543

294.1

Har

543

POONA

1953

Code No. D 30

First Edition : 500 Copies March 1953

All Rights Reserved

CENTRAL AGRICULTURAL LIBRARY
LIBRARY NEW DELHI

Acc. No. 543

Date. 23-11-53

Call No. 294.1/Har

PRICE RS. 15/-

Printed by Shri V. G. MOGHE at the Bombay University Press, Fort, Bombay and

Published by Dr. S. M. KATRE for the Deccan College Postgraduate and Research Institute, Yeravda, Poona 6.

DEDICATED TO
THE REVERED TEACHERS
AS AN HUMBLE TOKEN OF GRATITUDE

LIBRARY NEW DELHI
MUSEUM OF INDIAN HISTORY

OM

TÁT SAVITŪR VÁREṆYAM

BHÁRGO DEVÁSYA DHÍMAHI

DHÍYO YÓ NAḤ PRACODÁYĀT

RV III 62.10.

CENTRAL ARCHAEOLOGICAL
LIBRARY NEW DELHI

Acc. No. 543

Date. 23-11-53

Call No. ~~Sa 2 v1 / Har.~~ 294.1 / Har.

RECEIVED BY THE

LIBRARY OF THE

ARCHAEOLOGICAL

Vyāsādibhiḥ kavivarair avasādito'pi
 Śūnyatvam āpa kalayāpi na vākprapañcaḥ
 Ānandanirbharacakorasahasrapitam
 Cāndram mahāḥ kṣayam upaiti na mātrayāpi

—Sāktimuktāvali

CONTENTS

	PAGE
Foreword	xiii
Preface	xv
Bibliography and Abbreviations	xvii
Introduction	123-147
(1) The subject and its scope 123. (2) Pūrvasūryaḥ 123. (3) Sources of study 124. (4) Lines of Investigation 129. (5) Itihāsa-tradition 131. (6) The place of Legend in National Life 133. (7) The Age of the Ṛgveda 137. (8) Ṛgvedic Legends 139. (9) Lessons from the Legends 145.
I. The Legend of Saramā	148-183
(1) Ṛgveda Samhitā 150. (2) Samhitās other than the Ṛgveda 160. (3) Brāhmaṇas 161. (4) Nirukta 164. (5) Bṛhaddevatā 165. (6) Sarvānukramaṇī 169. (7) Sāyaṇa 170. (8) Nītimañjarī 175. (9) Rāmāyaṇa 175. (10) Mahābhārata 175. (11) Varāha Purāṇa 178. (12) Recent opinions 179. (13) Summary 181.
II. The Legend of Śunaśśepa	184-240
(1) Ṛgveda 184. (2) Samhitās other than the RV. 190. (3) Brāhmaṇas 191. (4) Vedic Ancillaries 196. (5) Later Exponents of the Veda 200. (6) Rāmāyaṇa 203. (7) Mahābhārata 208. (8) Purāṇas 212. (9) Modern opinions 225. (10) On the name Śunaśśepa 230. (11) Summary 239.
III. Vasiṣṭha and Viśvāmitra	241-330
(1) Ṛgveda 241. (2) Later Samhitās 257. (3) Brāhmaṇas 262. (4) Vedic Ancillaries 276. (5) Rāmāyaṇa 290. (6) Mahābhārata 296. (7) Purāṇas 314. (8) Recent opinions 322. (9) Summary 327.

FOREWORD

The present volume constitutes the ninth of the Institute's series entitled the Deccan College Dissertation Series, inaugurated in 1946 with the Historical Grammar of Old Kannaḍa by Dr. G. S. GAL. Since then the Institute has brought out during the past seven years seven volumes in the Series embodying the results of the researches carried on by its students during the last few years in different branches of Indology, particularly Linguistics and History, and I consider it a great privilege to present to the world of scholars the Institute's latest publication entitled *R̥gvedic Legends through the Ages by Dr. H. L. HARIYAPPA, now an Assistant Professor of Sanskrit at the University of Mysore and a former student of this Institute for his Ph.D. Course.

The subject of Dr. HARIYAPPA's thesis which is styled R̥gvedic Legends through the Ages was originally undertaken by him with a view to collecting all the legends which were referred to in the R̥gveda and have been transmitted to us through subsequent Vedic and post-Vedic literature including the Epics and the Purāṇas and studying the transformation which the legends underwent from age to age. Actual experience, however, proved that such a study of all the legends recorded in the R̥gveda was too vast to be undertaken by a single individual. The author had, therefore, to confine himself to the investigations with regard to only three legends viz. (1) Saramā, (2) Śunaśśepa and (3) Vasiṣṭha-Viśvāmitra, and I am happy to see that the results of his investigations are now available to the scholars and students of Sanskrit.

It is hoped that the publication of the present volume as also of the several others in the Institute's Dissertation Series will inspire our younger generation to undertake the study of numerous problems of Indian literature which forms the cultural heritage of India.

Poona, 15th June, 1953.

S. M. KATRE.

*First published in the Bulletin D.C.R.I. 11.123-330.

PREFACE

MYTHOLOGY, FOLKLORE AND LEGEND are terms more or less applied to the same type of popular tradition handed down through centuries from antiquity to posterity. In Bharatavarṣa (India), such a tradition has endured in the shape of itihāsa and purāṇa, which once upon a time lived in the mouths of the paurāṇikas (story-tellers) and which, in later times, found embodiment in the two great epics and the eighteen purāṇas.

Narration of legends before the assembly (sadas) provided an agreeable diversion in the daily routine of the famous Sacrifices from immemorial times. The reason is that, whatever name it goes by—myth, legend or folk-tale—the story attracts and holds the imagination of the listener. The very mould in which it is presented, iti ha āsa ('thus it was') is sufficient to arrest the faculty of belief, the love of the wonderful and the sensus numinis, which are innate in man. Thus we find that the myths and legends thrive on the fertile soil of popular credulity. Both the narrator and the listener together build up the vast legendary love of the nations and races.

Indeed, the myth or legend cannot come into being without a kernel of truth which is sometimes a natural phenomenon or a hero with superhuman strength and achievement. But passing through the mouth of generations, what proportion it assumes, what texture, colour and pattern it presents, and what authority and influence it wields on the belief and conduct of the common folk, is all a marvel to meditate.

The legends of India are rooted in the R̥gveda which happens to be the first literary document of the human race. Their analogues are of the course found in the mythology of other nations. In India itself, the legends developed and ramified through the ages and found themselves reflected in the continuous stream of literature. This book, R̥GVEDIC LEGENDS THROUGH THE AGES, is an attempt to study this historical evolution of the legends with a view to unravelling the complexities incidental to it. The legends are numerous and should be the life-work of many an eager scholar to study. In the short compass of this book, however, three legends have been presented—Saramā, Śunaśśepa and Vasiṣṭha-Viśvāmitra. It is revealed that Saramā is not the dog of heaven; she is verily a goddess and ally of Indra; the progenitor perhaps of the canine species. Śunaśśepa ('source of joy' not 'dog-tailed' as commonly understood: see p. 230 et seq) was saved from the thousand-edged stakes, hence a symbol of divine grace and man's emancipation. That he was the middle one (madhyama) of a fraternity with canine attributes is fiction out-and-out. Vasiṣṭha-Viśvāmitra feud is equally a myth; it has no vedic authority; possibly the two sages were friends! In fact, they stand out as two magnificent personalities representing ancient society, Vasiṣṭha (the Excellent) and Viśvāmitra (the Friend of All).

One point of supreme importance may be noted here. Legends everywhere are narrated in order to please and to edify. In promoting these two objects, it is noticeable that both story-teller and his listener go to extremes. There is endless and unbridled concoction which renders the story ridiculous betraying much low taste: witness the Śunaśśepa legend in the Devi-Bhāgavata for instance (p. 216) witness also, in our own day, the daring harikathā-performer whose discourses are, more often than not, such travesty of the scriptures. It is therefore not surprising that, in this Age of Reason, the Purāṇas do not appeal to the intelligent public. The writer however feels that in attempting to know our antiquity it is worthy to address ourselves to the study of original sources and help a better and more sensible understanding of the Past.

It is my most pleasant duty to record my sincere acknowledgment of the help received by me in the preparation and publication of this thesis. The University of Mysore granted me a Research Fellowship for three years and also permission to work in the Deccan College Post-Graduate and Research Institute (DCPRI). They were also pleased to permit me to submit the thesis for the degree of Ph.D. of the University of Bombay. I am deeply grateful to my Alma-Mater, the Mysore University.

Professor C. R. Narasimhasastri, M.A., directed my work first. I owe it to him to have suggested the topic of my research. He was my teacher throughout my College career. It is no exaggeration to say that his profound scholarship enlivened by an inimitable sense of wit and humour brought me lasting enlightenment. After his retirement, I studied entirely under the auspices of the DCPRI, first under Dr. V. M. ARTE, M.A., Ph.D. (Cantab.) and then under Dr. S. M. KATRE, M.A., Ph.D. (London). It was by the fostering care bestowed on me by Dr. KATRE that I was able to complete my work successfully. He has showered on me unbounded grace by publishing this Volume in the Dissertation Series of the DCPRI. No word can sufficiently express my gratitude to him. He hates nothing but praise; loves everything but self.

I cannot conclude this without gratefully remembering the ungrudging help and courtesy that I received from the DCPRI Library and the Staff, during my sojourn at the Deccan College, Poona.

BIBLIOGRAPHY AND ABBREVIATIONS

I. Samhitās : Editions :

RV.	Rgveda-Samhitā with Sāyana's com. ed. Max MÜLLER 2nd edn. Oxford 1892. 4 vols. (b) Recent edn. by the Vaidika Samśodhana Maṇḍala, Poona.
TS	Taittirīya—with Sāyana and Bhaṭṭa Bhāṣkara. ed. Ānandāśrama, Poona.
VS	Vājasaneyī—of the Mādhyandina with Mahidhara ed. Albrecht WEBER, Berlin and London 1852.
MS	Maitrāyaṇī—ed. SATAVALEKAR (Aundh).
KS	Kāṭhaka—ed. SATAVALEKAR (Aundh).
KapS	Kapīṣṭhala-Kaṭha Samhitā ed. Raghu VIRA, Vol. I.
AV	Atharvaveda —ed. S. P. PANDIT.

Translations

RV	H. H. WILSON (original edn.) 2nd edn. (Bangalore Press). (b) GRIFFITH (c) H. D. VELANKAR—Indra Hymns (JUB 1935-1947). (d) Tr. into German, GELDNER, Der Rīgveda (RV Maṇḍalas I-IV).
TS	Veda of the Black Yajus School, A. B. KEITH (HOS).
VS	GRIFFITH.
AV	(a) W. D. WHITNEY (HOS) (b) GRIFFITH.

II. Brāhmaṇas : Editions :

AB	Altareya Brāhmaṇa. Ānandāśrama (2 vols.), (b) ed. Satyavrata Śāmasramī B. I. Calcutta.
ŚākhB.	Śāṅkhāyana Brāhmaṇa—Ānandāśrama.
TB	Taittirīya—Mysore Oriental Library.
ŚB	Śatapatha—(a) WEBER with Coms. (b) Kāśī Sanskrit Series (c) Laxmi Venkateśvara Press, Bombay.
PB	Pañcaviṃśa—(Tāṇḍya) ed. Chinnaśwami SASTRI (1935) Kāśī Sanskrit Series.
JB	Jaiminīya Brāhmaṇa in Auswahl : CALAND.
JUBr.	Jaiminīya Upaniṣad (Tatsvakāra) Brāhmaṇa : HANS OERTEL (American Oriental Society).
ṢaḍB	Ṣaḍviṃśa—W. H. JULIUS with com. Vijnāpanabhāṣya.
GB	Gopatha—GAASTRA (Leiden) 1919.
EK	Ekāgni-Kāṇḍa (Mysore).

Translations

AB	Rigveda Brāhmaṇas Translated. KEITH (HOS).
ŚB	Śatapatha. tr. J. EGGEING (SBE 12, 26, 41, 43, 44).
PB	Pañcaviṃśa (Tāṇḍya) Brāhmaṇa tr. CALAND B.I. Calcutta 1931.

III. Āraṇyakas : Editions and translations

Alt.Ā.	Altareya Āraṇyaka. ed. and tr. A. B. KEITH (Anecdota Oxoniensia) Oxford 1880.
ŚākhĀ	Śāṅkhāyana Āraṇyaka : Text, Ānandāśrama, Poona ; tr. A. B. KEITH (Oriental Translation Fund) RAS
TaitĀ	Taittirīya Āraṇyaka (B.I. Calcutta, 1871).

IV. Sūtras :

Śāṅkh. ŚS.	...	Śāṅkhāyana Śrauta Sūtra ed. HILLEBRANDT BI. Calcutta 1888 (2 vols.).
ĀpŚS	...	Āpastamba Śrauta Sūtra ed. GARBE BI (3 vols.).
VaitS	...	Vaitāna Sūtra ed. GARBE (London) 1878.
ĀśGS	...	Āśvalāyana Gṛhyasūtra, ed. STENZLER, Leipzig, 1878.
PGS	...	Pāraskara Gṛhyasūtra, ed. STENZLER, Leipzig, 1878.
ĀpDhS	...	Āpastamba Dharma Sūtra (BSS).
GDhS	...	Gautama Dharma Sūtra (Mys. Oriental Library) and ĀnSS.
VDhS	...	Vāsiṣṭha Dharma Sūtra ed. FÜHRER (BSS).

V. Vedic Ancillaries :

Nir.	...	Yāska's Nirukta ed. BHADKAMKAR with Durga's com. 2 vols. (BSS). (b) ed. SARUP with Coms. of Skandasvāmin and Mahēśvara (Nighaṇṭu and the Nirukta), Lahore (c) tr. SARUP (OUP).
Nigh.	...	Nighaṇṭu (contained in Yāska's Nirukta).
BD	...	Bṛhaddevatā. ed. and tr. A. A. MACDONELL (HOS vols. 5 and 6).
Sarvā.	...	Sarvānukramanī with Śaṅkara's com. ed. MACDONELL (Aeneidota Oxoniensia) Oxford.
Ind MM.	...	Indices for RV by MAX MÜLLER (RV with Sāyana, 6 vols. 1st edn. bound together as Vol. VII in DCPRI.).
RVPr.	...	R̥gveda Prātiśākhya ed. and tr. Dr. Mangal Deva SASTRI (Lahore and Allahabad) Vols. II and III.
VPK	...	Vaidika Padānukrama Kośa ed. Viśvabandhu SASTRI (VRI Lahore). Sūtrahitā (one vol. in part) and Brāhmaṇas (complete).
BVC	...	BLOOMFIELD's Vedic Concordance (HOS).
Nīti, NM	...	Nītināṭijarī ed. Joshi (Benares).
Vaid. ŚK.	...	Vaidika Śabda Kośa by Nityānanda (NS Press) for RV, VS, SV and AV.

VI. Epics :

Rām.	...	Rāmāyaṇa with com. "Tilaka" (Nirnayasagar Press, referred to sometimes as NS Press or NS edn.) (b) ed. GORRESIO (1843-67).
Mbh.	...	Mahābhārata (a) BORI edn. in progress (Poona) (b) Citraśālā edn. (complete 7 vols. including Harivaṃśa) with Nīlakaṇṭha's com.
Hari.	...	Harivaṃśa (Citraśālā edn.).

VII. Purāṇas etc.

Bhāg.	...	Bhāgavata. ed. Eugene BURNOUR (Paris, 1847, incomplete).
Brahma.	...	Brahma Purāṇa, Ānandāśrama (ĀnSS).
Brahmaṇḍa	...	Brahmaṇḍa Purāṇa (NS Edn.).
Devī Bh.	...	Devī-Bhāgavata (Poona, with Marāṭhī tr.).
Mārka.	...	Mārkaṇḍeya Purāṇa. Text. ed. Lele (Wai) tr. F. E. PARGITER (BI Calcutta).
VP. Vāyu	...	Vāyu Purāṇa ed. (a) BI Calcutta (b) ĀnSS.
Viṣ.P.	...	Viṣṇu Purāṇa. Text (Poona) Tr. H. H. WILSON (Quarto. 1840).
Varāha	...	Varāha Purāṇa (BI Calcutta).

VIII. Classical Literature etc.

Artha.	...	Kautilya's Arthasāstra Text (Mysore Oriental Library) Tr. Dr. R. SHAMASASTRY.
--------	-----	---

Caṇḍa. Caṇḍakauśika (Calcutta).
Kavi Kavikaṇṭhābharaṇa of Kṣemendra (Kāvyaṃālā).
Manu Manusmṛti with Kullūka Bhaṭṭa's com. (NS Edn).
Nilakaṇṭha Nilakaṇṭha Vijaya (Bālaṃanoranā Press, Madras).
Pāṇ W-I Word Index to Pāṇini (BORI) PATHAK and CITRAV.
Raghu Raghuvamśa.
SK Siddhānta Kaumudī (NS Press 1942)
Subhā.Bh. Subhāṣitaratnabhāṇḍāgāra (NS Press).
Subhā Subhāṣitāvalī of Vallabhadeva (BSS).
Sūkti Sūktimuktāvalī of Jalhara (GOS).
Uttara Uttararāmācarita.

IX. General.

AIHT Ancient Indian Historical Tradition, F. E. PARGITER.
ASL History of Ancient Sanskrit Literature, MAX MÜLLER, (1860).
Bibl. Ved. Bibliographie Vedique, L. RENOU.
Brewer Reader's Handbook of Famous Names in Fiction.
CHI Cambridge History of India, Vol. I, Ed. RAPSON.
Colebrooke Miscellaneous Essays, COLEBROOKE.
Comp. My. Essays on Comparative Mythology (Chips, Longmans) MAX MÜLLER.
CSL History of Classical Sanskrit Literature, KRISHNAMACHARIAR.
Dhalla HZ History of Zoroastrianism.
EM Epic Mythology. E. W. HOPKINS (EIAR)
ERE Encyclopædia of Religion and Ethics.
ERWT Eastern Religion and Western Thought, Radhakrishnan.
Ethics Ethics of India, E. W. HOPKINS.
GEI The Great Epic of India, E. W. HOPKINS.
GW Wörterbuch zum Rig-Veda, GRASSMAN.
HIL History of Indian Literature, WINTERNITZ.
HSL History of Sanskrit Literature, MACDONELL.
IAM Essays on Indo-Aryan Mythology, Narayana Aiyangar.
India Discovery of India, Jawaharlal NEHRU.
Ind. Phil. Outlines of Indian Philosophy, M. HIRIYANNA.
KRPV, RPV Religion and Philosophy of the Veda, A. B. KEITH (HOS 2 vols.).
Lect. Lang. Lectures on the Science of Language, 2nd Series MAX MÜLLER (1864).
Max. India India, What can it Teach us (Chips. Longmans) MAX MÜLLER
MVG Vedic Grammar, MACDONELL.
OGR Origin and Growth of Religion (Hibbert Lectures) MAX MÜLLER.
OST, MOST Original Sanskrit Texts (5 vols.) J. MUIR (Trubner's).
PIS Progress of Indic Studies, ed. R. N. DANDEKAR (BORI).
Rel. V. Religion of the Veda, BLOOMFIELD.
Rituall Ritualliteratur, HILLEBRANDT (EIAR).
PVR Rig Veda Repetitions, BLOOMFIELD (2 vols. HOS).
Sin Vedic Idea of Sin, LEVEYER (Travancore).
SME Sukthankar Memorial Edition (2 vols. Poona)
VB Vedic Bibliography, R. N. DANDEKAR (NIA).
Ved. St. Vedic Studies, Dr. A. VENKATSUBBIAH.

VI.	Vedic Index of Names and Subjects, MACDONELL and KEITH (IT).
VM	Vedic Mythology, MACDONELL (EIAR).
VSL	History of Sanskrit Literature (Vedic Period), C. V. VAIDYA.
WIL	History of Indian Literature, WEBER.

X. Commemoration Volumes :

Asutosh	Sir Asutosh Mookerji Silver Jubilee Vols. (Calcutta).
Bhandarkar	R. G. Bhandarkar Commemoration Volume (BORI).
Hiriyanna	Prof. M. Hiriyanna Commemoration Vol. (Mysore).
Jha	Dr. Ganganath Jha Commemoration Vol. (OBA).
Kane	A Volume of Studies in Indology presented to Prof. P. V. Kane (OBA, Poona).
Law	B. C. Law Commemoration Volume (2 Parts).
Mālavīya	Mālavīya Commemoration Vol. (Benares).
Mookerjee	Bhārata-Kaumudi in honour of Dr. Radha Kumud Mookerji, Part I (Lucknow).
Woolner	Woolner Commemoration Volume (Lahore).

XI. Series :

ĀnSS	Ānandāśrama Sanskrit Series, Poona.
BI	Bibliotheca Indica (Calcutta).
BS	Bibliotheca Sanskrita (Mysore).
BSS	Bombay Sanskrit Series (BORI).
EIAR	Encyclopædia of Indo-Aryan Research (Strassburg).
GOS	Gaekwad Oriental Series (Baroda).
HOS	Harvard Oriental Series (Harvard, USA).
IT	Indian Texts Series (London).
KSS	Kāśī Sanskrit Series (Benares).
OUP	Oxford University Press (Oxford).
SBE	Sacred Books of the East (Oxford).

XII. Journals etc.

ABORI	Annals of BORI.
AIOC	All-India Oriental Conference (Proceedings), BORI.
AmJPh.	American Journal of Philology.
BDCRI	Bulletin of the DCRI, Poona.
Bh.Vid.	Bharatiya Vidya, Bombay.
BORI	Bhandarkar Oriental Research Institute, Poona.
DCRI	Deccan College Post-graduate and Research Institute, Poona.
IA	Indian Antiquary.
IC	Indian Culture, Calcutta.
IF	Indo-germanische Forschungen, Berlin.
IHQ	Indian Historical Quarterly, Calcutta.
JAOS	Journal of the American Oriental Society, New Haven, U.S.A.
JASB	Journal of the Asiatic Society of Bengal.
JBBRAS	Journal of the Bombay Branch of the RAS.
JBU	Journal of the Bombay University.
JBORS	Journal of the Behar and Orissa Research Society.
JDL	Journal of the Department of Letters (Calcutta University).

JMys.U.	Journal of the Mysore University.
JORM	Journal of Oriental Research, Madras.
JRAS	Journal of the Royal Asiatic Society.
JUPHS	Journal of the United Provinces Historical Society.
KPH	Karnatak Publishing House, Bombay.
NIA	New Indian Antiquary, KPH, Bombay. (Now DCRI, Poona).
OBA	Oriental Book Agency, Poona.
PO	Poona Orientalist, OBA, Poona.
QJMS	Quarterly Journal of the Mythic Society, Bangalore.
VVRI	Viśveśvarānanda Vedic Research Institute, Lahore.
ZDMG	Zeitschrift der Deutschen Morgenlandischen Gesellschaft, Leipzig.

INTRODUCTION

THE SUBJECT AND ITS SCOPE

THE subject of this study is entitled "RĠVEDIC LEGENDS THROUGH THE AGES." The purpose is to gather all the legends which are clearly referred to in the RĠveda and which have come down to us through subsequent Vedic and post-Vedic literature, including the Epics and the Purāṇas, to record the transformation which they have undergone from age to age and then to determine the rationale of such transformation. Incidentally, the chronology of the several ancient texts apart from the very Age of the RĠveda comes into inquiry. The original home of the RĠvedic seers and the provenance of the sacred hymns require discussion. Whether there was an Indo-Iranian period at all in the great trek of the ancients, whether the Indian branch was quite independent of the Iranian, or whether the latter subsequently branched off from India Iran-wards—these are problems still awaiting solution. In the meantime, the great discovery of the prehistoric cultures of Harappa and Mohenjodaro and kindred types in Asia Minor has challenged all the more the tenacious efforts of Research to unravel ancient chronology. It has even baffled attempts to determine the relative sequence of the RĠvedic and the Indus-Valley civilizations. While the student owes a great debt to the researches of pioneers like Max Müller and Darmesteter, followed by a galaxy of accomplished scholars in India and outside and while, again, he is as much beholden to the finds of great explorers like Marshall, Majumdar and Aurel Stein, a more intensive study of protohistoric documents and a more extensive excavation of prehistoric sites,¹ and, above all, a consistent and comprehensive appreciation of the results of the twofold inquiry (literary and archæological), yet appear to be desirable pursuits.

It was originally intended to study all if not most of the legends but the material collected grew into great proportion and the range of study extending from the RĠveda to the Purāṇas through the intermediate stages represented by the later Samhitās, the Brāhmaṇas, the Epics etc., a study of all the legends proved impossible within the allotted time. Hence, three legends only were taken up for detailed investigation viz. (1) SARAMĀ (2) ŚUNAŚŚĒPA² and (3) VASIṢṬHA AND VIŚVĀMITRA.

II

PŪRVASŪRAYAṆ

The subject of Vedic Legends is vast, but comparatively few scholars have dealt with it³. The light of Vedic tradition was however kept burning in works

1. "Domain of prehistory ends with the appearance of written documents; Indus Civilisation belongs to proto-history (up to Alexander's invasion)" Rev. H. Heras, Pre-history and Proto-history (JBROS 28, June 1942).

2. On the orthography of this word vide section X (end) of ch. III infra.

3. Cf. Dr. C. K. Rāja's Presidential address, para 5 (Vedic Section) XII AIOC (Benares 1944).

like the Nirukta, Bṛhaddevatā and Sarvānukramaṇī and by commentators like Sāyaṇa and Śaḍguruśiṣya.⁴ Dyā Dviveda's Nītimañjarī is perhaps the last known attempt to record and interpret the legends of the R̥gveda.

Since the time of the "discovery of Sanskrit," however, pioneers⁵ in the West have among their writings recorded their impressions of various legends. An elaborate historical study was made by J. Muir in his "Original Sanskrit Texts" (5 vols.). Latterly, Dr. Sieg wrote a monograph on "Die Sagenstoffe des R̥gveda und die indische Itihāsatrādition" setting forth general principles of investigation and dealing with four legends.⁶ Jarl Charpentier wrote a dissertation on "Die Suparṇasage"⁷ wherein he not only 'analyses the several motifs of the Suparṇa legend but also makes a learned contribution to the study of Indian legends in general.' Macdonell and Keith's "Vedic Index of Names and Subjects"⁸ is an invaluable contribution in the field, apart from being a veritable source-book of Vedic lore in general. F. E. Pargiter has attempted to correlate the Purāṇic legends with those of the Veda and brought out his "Ancient Indian Historical Tradition."⁹ Studies of single legends have been published from time to time by Bloomfield, Macdonell and others. In India too, considerable interest has been evinced by several scholars.¹⁰

III

SOURCES OF STUDY

An attempt is made to go into the original sources for a study of the legends. Mainly, the sources are :

- (a) The Samhitās and other Vedic texts including the Brāhmaṇas (1500 B.C.–600 B.C.)¹¹
- (b) Yāska's Nirukta¹² (500 B.C.)
- (c) Śaunaka's Bṛhaddevatā¹³ (400 B.C.).

4. This is so far as the legends are concerned. Nirukta relates 36 stories, BD 40 and Śiṣya 23. The stories related by Sāyaṇa are innumerable.

5. e.g. Roth (Zur Litteratur und Geschichte des Weda); Max Müller (History of Ancient Sanskrit Literature), H. H. Wilson (Translation of RV in 6 vols.). Wilson has noted all the legends in his notes and sometimes given a historical estimate.

6. Viz. Die Śāringas, Śyāvāśva Ātreya, Vṛṣa Jāna and Vāmadeva Gautama. Some of the author's views were open to criticism. Cf. BD ed. Macdonell, p. xxix and n. 4 on the same page.

7. Uppsala and Leipzig, 1920.

8. Indian Texts Series, John Murray, London, 1912 (in 2 vols.).

9. Oxford University Press, 1922.

10. For a survey of recent researches, see A. D. Pusalkar's article in PIS, pp. 101-152, also Dandekar, Ibid., pp. 52 f.

11. The dates given against the works are approximate and generally the most accepted ones. They are, however, tentative, as many "pins set up only to be bowled down!" (Whitney).

12. The edition here used is that of the Bombay Sanskrit Series ed. H. M. and R. G. Bhadkamkar (2 vols.).

13. Ed. and Trans. A. A. Macdonell (HOS vols. 5 and 6, 1904).

- (d) Kātyāyana's Sarvānukramaṇī (350 B.C.) with the Vedārthadīpikā of Ṣaḍguruśiṣya¹⁴ (1187 A.D.).
- (e) Sāyaṇa's Vedārthaprakāśa,¹⁵ being the commentary on the RV (1350 A.D.).
- (f) Nītimañjarī¹⁶ of Dyā Dvīveda (1594 A.D.).
- (g) The Epics—Rāmāyaṇa¹⁷ and Mahābhārata.¹⁸
- (h) Purāṇas¹⁹ like Brahma, Viṣṇu, Vāyu, Bhāgavata etc. all of which are said to date from 400 A.D.

It may be remembered that the R̥gveda-Samhitā does not narrate any legend ; but it is replete with allusions to numerous stories and episodes. These have been recounted and amplified in later Vedic and post-Vedic literature. We see the first attempts at narration in the Bhāhmanas;²⁰ the Sunaśśepa legend, for instance, is fully narrated in the Aitareya which is said to be the oldest of its class. Its R̥gvedic basis is a mere reference to Śunaśśepa's deliverance from the stakes. Vasiṣṭha and Viśvāmitra both had enemies against whom they poured curses, but it is not known to the RV whether they hated each other. Similarly, the story of Saramā is hinted in outlines only in the Family-maṇḍalas. The dialogue between her and the Paṇis in the tenth maṇḍala (RV X 108)²¹ provides however an artistic setting for the story.

During the post-Vedic period, tradition has been recorded in some cases, but briefly, by Yāska. Perhaps a younger contemporary of the authors of the Sūtras, his style has naturally been aphoristic. It could not be otherwise in the case of the Sarvānukramaṇī (350 B.C.) also, which is in the nature of a comprehensive index to the R̥gveda. It had had to comprise in the small compass of a sentence which should easily lend itself to be memorised, things like the prātika, ṛṣi, devatā, 14. Ed. with notes. A. A. Macdonell (Anecdota Oxoniensia) Oxford, 1886.

15. Max Müller, 2nd edn. Oxford 1892. The Vaidika Samśodhana Maṇḍala (Poona) edition was recently completed and published (4 vols.). [As we go to the Press the 5th (Indices) volume has also been published 1951].

16. Ed. S. J. Joshi (Benares) 1933—Hari Har Maṇḍal, Kālabhairava, Benares City.

17. Nirṇayasāgar Edition with com. " Tilaka " (1922) and that of Gorresio (Italy).

18. BORI and Citrasālā editions, Poona. The former is the famous Critical Edition inaugurated by R. G. Bhandarkar in 1917, published to the end of Bhīṣma-parva. [Of late, Karna and Śānti have appeared in parts]. The latter is a complete publication in 7 vols. (including Harivamśa) with the commentary of Nīlakaṇṭha.

19. Mostly Ānandāśrama editions, some Nirṇayasāgar; Bhāgavata by E. Burnouf (Incomplete; up to end of 9 Skandhas only). Good critical editions of all the Purāṇas are a dire necessity.

20. The Brāhmanas, besides amplifying some of the stories alluded to in the Samhitās, themselves originated a number of them to illustrate or support the various aspects of the Sacrifice. Any new technique meant the weaving of an old story to speak of its efficacy.

21. RV X 108 is itself a Brāhmana-like amplification of the episode which was hinted by earlier Seers, Viśvāmitra, Gautama, Ātreya and others. Note that Paṇis and Saramā are themselves the Ṛṣi and the Devatā for the hymn: (Paṇyuktau Saramā devī taduktāu Paṇayas tathā). The real author or Seer is anonymous.

chandas, and finally an episode or legend if any; hence its brevity.²²

The Bṛhaddevatā of Śaunaka (400 B.C.) happens to be a very useful source-book. It is mainly devoted to an enumeration of the deities of the RV in categorical order. But it comprises other matter also. The introduction which occupies the first chapter and three-quarters of the second, provides an interesting grammatical discussion closely related to the Nirukta and dealing with particles, propositions, nouns, pronouns, compounds and the analysis of words together with a criticism of Yāska's errors in dividing words. In the main body of the work is interspersed a considerable amount of other matter, notably about forty legends²³ meant to explain the circumstances in which the hymns they were connected with, were composed. About 300 ślokas, or approximately one-fourth of the whole work, are devoted to these legends. Narrated in epic style, they form the oldest systematic collection of legends which we possess in Sanskrit.

Sāyaṇa's commentary, Vedārthaprakāśa, is a mine of legendary information. Under the ægis of this versatile scholar,²⁴ a band of profound scholars joined and wrote commentaries on all the sacred works, samhitās, brāhmaṇas, Śrauta Sūtras etc. and also works of a secular nature.²⁵ Just as the rise of Vijayanagara marked the revival of Hindu power, so also Sāyaṇa's literary efforts marked the resuscitation of ancient Sanskrit Literature.

Lastly, we have the Nitimañjarī of Dyā Driveda (1494 A.D.). This work is a "collection of some 166 ethical maxims" illustrated as a rule by events and stories of the Vedic period. Relevant mantras and hymns from the RV are quoted and

22. Śaṅguruṣiṣya (1187 A.D.), commentator of Sarvā, has related 23 legends in the course of his commentary known as Vedārthadīpikā (See p. 210 for a list). The name of this scholiast is impressive. According to Macdonell, his real name is not known, he was truly a disciple of six teachers whom he mentions at the end of com. (p. 168). They taught him seven books of knowledge: Vināyakaś Sūlapāñir Mukundaś Sūryo Vyāsaś Śivayogi ca ṣaḍ vai / Namāmi tān sarvadā pāntu mām te yair vai ṣaḍbhis sapta vidyās tu dattāḥ // Ādyā Sarvānukramāṇī dvitīyā mahāvratam copaniṣaddvayam ca / Mahāvratam sūtram āsām tṛtīyā catvāriṃśadbrāhmaṇam (Aitareya Brāhmaṇa) vai caturthī // Sūtram pañcamyatara ṣaṣthī tu gṛhyam Śākalyasya samhitā saptamī / Imā dattā vidyās tu ṣaḍbhir yair vai ṣaḍbhyo gurubhyo hi namo'stu tebhyaḥ // One wonders whether these were real names—Vināyaka, Sūlapāñi, Mukunda, Sūrya, Vyāsa and Śivayogi. This Pupil of Six Teachers lived in an age of intense literary activity (1187 A.D.) and himself rose to fame by his erudition and writings. It looks somewhat fictitious that not one of this group has otherwise been known in literary tradition. The names mentioned might represent presiding deities to whom the author was devoted. The first four had become the foremost gods in the religious conception and daily life by the 12th century. The fifth Vyāsa is the mythical compiler of all ancient books. The Sixth, perhaps, was a real person or the Spiritual Entity that he had conceived as a result of his profound learning.

23. Vide BD p. 132 for a list of them. Macdonell's edition of BD. is a model in the art and science of editing. Editing ancient oriental texts is considered to be a highly complicated task. Distinguished scholars, specially in the West, have put forth their best efforts in the field for over a century and a half. The principles and methods evolved out of such a long period of practical work have been illuminatingly set forth in the "Introduction to Indian Textual Criticism" by Dr. S. M. Katre (DCPRI, Poona) 1941.

24. Cf. P. D. Gunc, Sāyaṇa's commentary—its composition. Asutosh Mookerjee Silver Jubilee Volumes: Vol. III Orientalia Part 3 (1927), pp. 467-77. The idea is that the com. is not the work of one hand, but many co-operated to bring out the great work, under the general editorship of Sāyaṇa. The present writer has adduced further proof in his article "The Rgvedic word Parvata" contributed to the Prof. M. Hiriyanna Commemoration Volume (in the Press), Mysore. [Since published].

25. Works like Mādhaviya-dhātu-vṛtti, Kālamādhaviya, Bindu-mādhaviya etc.

commented upon, largely borrowing from Sāyaṇa's commentary. Once Keith demurred²⁶ at the idea of editing Nītimañjarī on the ground that there was little originality and less of contribution to knowledge in it. Though this is not wholly untrue, one feels that his decision against its publication was somewhat harsh. The importance of the work would have been evident if only its precursors like BD and Sarvā. had still to be unearthed. For the preservation of knowledge and continuity of tradition, it is indisputable that works, even of the nature of digests or compilations, need to be prepared and published from time to time. The one feature of the Nītimañjarī is that the illustrations are taken from the Veda only. For our purpose, we shall take account of it for additional corroboration of Vedic references.

Macdonell and Keith's "Vedic Index of Names and Subjects" is an indispensable guide to the student of Vedic antiquity. The authors' claim²⁷ is quite justified that "it would include all information that can be extracted from Vedic literature on such topics as agriculture, astronomy, burial, caste, clothing, crime, diseases, economic conditions, food and drink, gambling, kingship, law and justice, marriage, morality, occupations, polyandry and polygamy, the position of women, usury, village communities, war, wedding ceremonies, widow-burning, witchcraft and many others. The proper names would embrace not only persons, tribes and peoples, but also mountains, rivers and countries. The geographical distribution of the Vedic population would thus also be presented." The special merit of the work is that the authors being themselves profound scholars of Sanskrit have not only culled out references from all available texts in an exhaustive manner, but also have recorded up-to-date results of comparative and critical investigations on various subjects and aspects bearing on the Veda.

In estimating the value of the Epics and the Purāṇas for a historical study,²⁸ the view is generally held that sound conclusions are possible when only critical

26. Vide Keith : JRAS 1900, pp. 127-36. Keith has made a thorough examination of the work and one is obliged to, even after perusing the publication of it in Benares, agree entirely with his findings. Dyā wrote the Nītimañjarī in 1444 A.D. Writing just a century after the Vedic revival in Vijayanagara under the leadership of Mādhava and Sāyaṇa, may it be that Dyā was echoing the Sāyaṇa tradition? It has been said above that the Sāyaṇa-Mādhava output could not have been single-handed. A number of scholars should have worked under them as in an Academy. If Mukunda Dviveda, great-grandfather of Dyā was a repository of Vedic lore, he might have well-nigh directly contributed to the great revival, at least as a junior contemporary of Sāyaṇa. Dviveda's abode was Ānanda, according to a verse in the work. If it is a place-name, it need not be in Gujarat only or in the heights of Kashmir. It may be somewhere in the south as well. There is an Ānandapuram in Mysore State near the Bombay border, not very far from old Vijayanagar (Hampi); and there are Vājasaneyins and Rk-sākhins in good number. The Uvata association was dismissed by Keith as untenable. The point is whether the family could be related to the Sāyaṇa School directly, in which case the portion of the Vedābhāṣya contained in the Nīti may have been Dyā's family inheritance. But we must have further corroboration.

27. See p. vii VI Vol. I. It is a surprise, however, that the learned authors do not include Saramā in the Index. Macdonell has omitted to mention her name even in his HSL. (1900). She should find a place at least as a "heavenly animal" or a mythical entity. Suparṇa has been included (vol. II p. 455)! It seems to me to be an unaccountable omission.

28. For a thoroughly dependable account, reference may be made to Winternitz HIL vol. I (1927) : section on Epics and Purāṇas, pp. 311-606. The findings of pioneer scholars like Wilson and later of Holtmann, Dahmann, Jacobi, Hopkins and others have been well digested and, may we add, fair conclusions arrived at by Winternitz. His enthusiastic efforts before the International Congress of Orientalists to set afoot a critical edition of the Mahābhārata culminated in the present BORI undertaking.

editions of the texts are made available. No definite period of composition can be fixed for these works, because, through centuries they have been subjected to additions and alterations with the result that they have grown in bulk. As it has proved in the case of the Mahābhārata, it is an arduous task to bring out critical editions. All the same the necessity for them is beyond question, if a systematic insight into the currents and cross currents of our culture is to be gained. At present, however, all observations based on the versions found in the Epics and the Purāṇas will have to be made with due caution.

The importance and popularity of these works, indeed, can, in no way, be lost sight of. They are the bed-rock of Hindu civilization. The Mahābhārata, specially, is not only an epic, not only a work of poetic art (kāvyā), but also, as Winternitz puts it, "a manual (Śāstra) of morality, law and philosophy, supported by the oldest tradition (smṛti) and hence furnished with incontestible authority; and since more than 1,500 years it has served the Indians as much for entertainment as for instruction and edification."²⁹

The Rāmāyaṇa was exposed in a far less degree to tampering by later hands. It could therefore, in spite of the first and seventh books, which are considered to be later additions, be still viewed as a compact work, when compared with the Mbh. Whereas the latter assumed grand proportions as it had to record the destinies of a whole race i.e. of the Kauravas bestirring the three worlds,³⁰ the former described the life-story of one hero, Śrī Rāma, who has been described as an embodiment of human perfection. Rāmāyaṇa, though less voluminous than the sister epic, is still a valuable book of human experience, less unwieldy but none-the-less full of æsthetic appeal. If we may so describe, Rāmāyaṇa is for the Individual, Mahābhārata is for the Nation. More than before, the need is now great that the country should look back at these storehouses of culture and bring to bear a proper reorientation on the future outlook.

"The Purāṇas belong to the religious literature and are, for the later Indian religion which is generally called Hinduism and which culminates in the worship of Śiva and Viṣṇu, approximately what the Veda is for the oldest religion or Brāhmaṇism."³¹ They are closely connected with the epic compositions and further elaborate the legends contained therein to suit their own purpose. There has been no rule or restraint for such accretions, for even in later times, books are fabricated which assume the proud title "purāṇa," or claim to be parts of ancient Purāṇas. As Winternitz puts it, they are "new wine in old bottles."

"The Purāṇas are confessedly partly legendary and partly historical. The descriptions of superhuman beings and of other worlds than this, are glorified

29. HIL I, p. 321.

30. Cf. Bāṇa :

Kim kaves tasya kāvyena sarvavyūttāntagāminā
Katheva bhārati yasya na vyāpnoti jagatrayam //

—Harṣacarita (Introd. śloka).

31. Winternitz, HIL, p. 517.

accounts of the unknown founded on the analogy of the known. They are the products of an imaginative and uncritical age in which men were not careful to distinguish fact from legend. It is the task of modern criticism to disentangle the two elements. Its first object should be to remove from the existing Purāṇas all later additions, and then form a comparison of their oldest portions to determine the relations in which they stand to one another and thus, as far as possible, to restore their common tradition to its original form."³²

IV

LINES OF INVESTIGATION

One need not aspire for any novel finds in the study of the legends. They are repeated again and again in successive generations; perhaps, repetition is their strong point. Repetition and reconstruction being their regular features they bear a study ever and anon. So much has been written in the past by eminent scholars. The present study is a humble attempt to know them as far as possible. Hence the writer submits :

Kati kavayaḥ kati kṛtayaḥ kati luptāḥ kati caranti kati śīthilāḥ /
Tad api pravartayati mām nigamoktākhyānasamvidhānehā //³³

The study of ancient lore has to be approached with faith, free from modern materialistic prejudices which have hampered true appreciation and rendered criticism more destructive than constructive. Those who indulge in the destructive type had better keep away; it is in this spirit that the parable of Goddess Vidyā is repeated by several Vedic schools for the edification of the earnest student :

Vidyā ha vai brāhmaṇam ājagāma
Gopāya mā śevadhiṣṭe'ham asmī /
Asūyakāyānrjave'yatāya
Na mā brūyā vīryavatī tathā syām //
Ya ātṛṇattyavitathena karṇā-
Vaduḥkham kurvannamṛtam samprayacchan /
Tam manyeta pītaram mātaram ca
Tasmai na druhyet katamaccanāha //
Adhyāpitā ye gurum nādrīyante
Viprā vācā manasā karmaṇā vā /
Yathaiva te na guror bhojanīyās tathaiva tām na bhunakti śrutam tat //
Yam eva vidyāḥ śucim apramattam
Medhāvinam brahmacaryopapannam /

32. Rapson, CHI, Vol. p. 299.

33. Adapted from Nīlakaṇṭha-vijaya, the last quarter of the original being : Śaṅkara-pāramyasaṅkathālobhaḥ.

Yas te na druhyet katamaccanāha
Tasmai mā brūyā nidhipāya brahman //34

Goddess Vidyā once approached the Brāhmaṇa and said : ' Protect me, I am thy treasure. Impart me not to any one who is envious, not straightforward and who has no self-control, so will I remain a source of strength. (A student) should regard him, as father and as mother, who fills the ears with TRUTH without causing pain but pouring nectar. By no means should a student prove treacherous to him. Those vipras (learned pupils) who, though instructed, will not respect the Teacher in thought, word and deed shall deserve no favour from the Teacher; similarly, too, the knowledge (so obtained) shall not favour them. Therefore, O Brahman, thou shalt impart me only to him who will keep the trust, whom thou thinkest to be pure and not heedless, intelligent and devoted to his duties as a student and who would by no means prove treacherous to thee.'

Mythology, in general, may be described as a historical and scientific study of myths and legends; the whole body of divine, heroic and cosmogonic legends come under its purview. Myths and legends are classified as meteorological, physical, historical, ritualistic, artistic, ethical, mystical, or allegorical and so on. Myths are traditional, having had their source often in individual imagination. Psychologically, the function of myth, is to strengthen tradition and endow it with a greater value and prestige by tracing it back to a higher, better and more supernatural reality of ancient events. "From myth spring the epic romance and tragedy. Myth, therefore, touches the deepest desires of man—his fears, his hopes, his passions, his sentiments as it validates the social order, justifies the existing social scheme and ranges from expressions of sheer artistry to legalism."

Myth in common parlance savours of what is untrue, unreal, all the same it has a hold on man's imagination. There is a certain amount of rational element in it, as, for instance, in the myths relating to the Dawn and the Sun. Sometimes, the irrational element, as in the story of the Creator himself committing incest, renders a myth repugnant. Plato would reject such untrustworthy stories of gods from his ideal State !

The study of mythology is obscure and difficult but when rightly and cautiously pursued it abounds with evidence as to the primitive aspirations and beliefs of mankind and as to the various stages of moral and intellectual development.³⁵

In the present study, by legend is meant a story which describes an ancient event in which the characters are from, or are akin to, mankind and in which, the emotions and experiences, such as those of human beings are described. In this way, it differs from a myth which is more often than not a fanciful representation of a

34. Quoted by Sāyana—' Śākhāntaragataih caturbhir mantraiḥ '—at the end of his Introduction to the RV commentary. The verses are found in VDHŚ (BSS XXIII 3rd edn. 1930 BORI) II 8-11.

35. The above is based on the views expressed in the Encyc. Britannica and ERE. What is said of the myth equally applies to legend.

natural phenomenon. Thus the solar and lunar myths were brought home by Max Müller in his numerous writings. Sometimes, indeed, a concrete legend, like that of Saramā or Purūravas, was harnessed into a myth. Saramā, Indra's messenger (Indrasya dūtīḥ)—not the watch-dog of the gods (devaśunī) as she somehow came to be designated later—went to the Pāpis and demanded the release of Indra's cattle; with Saramā as guide, Indra found the Pāpis, destroyed them and recovered the cattle. These concrete lines are rendered into evanescent myth stating that Saramā the Dawn, signalling the dispelling of darkness, heralds the advent of Indra's cattle viz. the Sun's rays. The immortal lovers, Purūravas and Urvaśī, are, mythically, the Sun and the Dawn. The birth of the sage Vasiṣṭha from Urvaśī is, again, the birth of the Sun from the Dawn. Which to choose and cherish, legend or myth, mankind decided; the myth gradually receded to the background but the legend held on. It caught the imagination of men and began to thrive on it, being harnessed at will for their own ends and purposes. For when man began to narrate a story, he put his own mind into it, so much so the original outlines were entirely missed or misrepresented. But then the history of the legends proves that they are almost beside the truth; why should they be studied? It is precisely to know the real basis of the legends, the transformation that time wrought upon them, the consistency and the logical necessity of such transformation and finally the reaction of the people who stored them as a rich heritage.

V

ITIHĀSA-TRADITION

Our legends have a hoary past; their roots extend to the Vedas themselves. Known by the comprehensive name, Itihāsa (iti ha āsa=thus, indeed, it was), they constituted a necessary adjunct to the four Vedas, because, Itihāsa is described as the fifth Veda.³⁶ According to Kauṭilya's Arthaśāstra,³⁷ Itihāsa comprises purāṇa (old legends), itivṛtta (history), ākhyāyikā (fables), udāharana (illustrative stories), dharmaśāstra (codes of law) and arthaśāstra (political science). The king is expected to spend the afternoon in listening to these sources of knowledge. Thus Itihāsa gives us the impression that it is not a single work but a species of literary productions. But this range was acquired by the time of Kauṭilya (4th cent. B.C.?) In the early literature, we find numerous references to Itihāsa, Purāṇa and Itihāsa-purāṇa etc. But if they were actually composed, they do not exist today. Max Müller³⁸ thought that the Rāmāyaṇa and the Mbh. have taken their place and

36. Chāndogya-Up. VII 1 f and 7, Buddhist Suttanipāṭa III 7, both referred to by Winternitz. HIL p. 313 and n2, 3.

37. "Sāmargyajurvedās trayas trayī / Atharvavedetiḥāsavedau ca vedāḥ / " K. Artha. I 3. "Pūrvam abarbhāgam hastyaśvarathapraharaṇavidyāsu vinayam gacchet / Paścimam itihāsaśravane / Purāṇam itivṛttam ākhyāyikodāharanām Dharmaśāstram Arthaśāstram ceti-tiḥāsah / " Ibid. I 5 cf. HIL p. 313 n.4. As species of literature which go by the name of Veda, may be mentioned Āyurveda, Dhanurveda and Gāndhārvaveda. Cf. also Amara (I vi. 4) 'iti-hāsaḥ purāṇavṛttam' = what happened before, an event of the past. By the time of this definition, all the words were taken as synonymous—itiḥāsa, itivṛtta, purāṇa, ākhyāna etc. Cf. again HIL p. 311 note.

38. Hibbert Lectures, p. 154 note. Also "India, what can it teach us?", pp. 88-89.

that the later Purāṇas even may contain materials, though much altered, of what was called in Vedic literature, the Purāṇas. It is one view that the old itihāsas of the Vedic period were handed by oral tradition only; they had no fixed text. On the other hand, Sieg thinks that its vestiges are found scattered over the different branches of Vedic literature, the Brāhmaṇas, the Sūtras etc.³⁹ If we reflect upon the whole problem, the existence of an Itihāsa-tradition even at the time of the Rgvedic compilation, nay, even before when the hymns were being seen or composed, cannot be doubted. It did not require a Sūta Lomahaṛṣaṇa to narrate the legends in assemblies, for in the life of the Vedic community and the extent of its holdings which were limited, the stories were well-known and did not require any discourse thereupon. But later on there came the Age of the Brāhmaṇas which was dominated by ritual. Looking at the laborious exegetical attempts and far-fetched grammatical fancies of this ritual literature, one is driven to suspect a long break in Vedic tradition,⁴⁰ with the result that fact was substituted by fancy in the reconstruction of old tradition (purāṇa). Purāṇa assumed a definite status and came to be considered a regular part of any sacrificial programme.⁴¹ As time rolled on, the Itihāsa grew in proportion and finally was set down to record through the Epics and Purāṇas.

By the time of Yāska, a regular class of thinkers is recognised called the Aitiḥāsikas.⁴² They interpreted the Veda from the legendary point of view. For other points of view, there were the Niruktas⁴³ (etymologists), Yājñikas⁴⁴ and Pūrve-yājñikas⁴⁵ (Sacrificial school, old and new), and the Vaiyākaraṇas⁴⁶ (Grammarians). To this we should add an Astronomical school (Jyantiśakas) who attempt to locate a star in the firmament for every hero of the Veda. We have heard of the most popular story of Orion being no other than the famous Ikṣvāku king Triśaṅku. In the same manner other constellations also, it must be possible to identify; hence the origin and growth of a series of legends always harping upon the starry heavens. It is not a very popular school, though as is seen in individual cases, it became a regular hobby of a few scholars. Remarkable are Dr. R. Shama Sastry's books and articles in this direction, contributed to various journals in India.⁴⁷ With the spread of Vedic studies in the West, a new school of interpretation was initiated by Rudolph Roth, which may be designated as the Philological or Linguistic 39. ERE Sieg's article on Itihāsa.

40. Cf. M. Hiriyanṇa: Outlines of Indian Philosophy, p. 29 also ASL, pp. 432-34. Witness the extent of amplification that the Śunaśśepa Legend received at the hands of 'tradition' from RV to AB.

41. ASL p. 40. At the Aśvamedha, on the eighth day, the itihāsas are recited and on the ninth, the purāṇas. The word aitiḥya is used in TA (I 1.2) to signify tradition in a very wide sense: Sāyaṇa explains—itiḥāsa-purāṇa-mahābhārata-brāhmaṇādikam!

42. Nir. II 16, III 1, 10.

43. Referred to twenty times.

44. Nir. V 11, VII 4, XI 29, 31, 42, 43.

45. VII 23.

46. I 12, IX 5.

47. Vide Dandekar's Vedic Bibliography. Index of Authors, p. 383.

School.⁴⁸ According to this School, the Vedic Language should be understood on its own authority, bringing to bear the kinship of other Indo-Aryan languages; should not trust to Sāyaṇa only who is "the blind man's stick" in the path of Vedic Exegesis. Wilson, Colebrooke⁴⁹ and others recognised a Traditional School, reflected in the Commentary of Sāyaṇa whom the former considered as the safest guide through the intricacies and obscurities of the text. This classification is not complete if a reference is not made to some scholars who perceive nothing but philosophy in the Vedic mantras. They form the Ādhyātmika or Philosophic School.⁵⁰ Of the eight Schools of Vedic Thought and Interpretation adverted to above, viz. :

Nairuktas (Etymologists)
Yājñikas (Ritualists)
Vaiyākaraṇas (Grammarians)
Jyauṭṣakas (Astronomers)
Bhāṣāvids (Linguists of the West)
Sampradāyavids (Traditionists)
Adhyātmavids (Philosophers), and Aitiḥāsikas ('Legendarians')

the first seven became the province of the student and the specialist, while the last came to edify the common man. Thus developed the vast literature of the Epics and the Purāṇas to entertain and instruct the commonalty. Regarding Vedic interpretation, the present outlook is one of via media. It takes into account all the aspects above recapitulated before deciding upon the meaning of a passage. With the researches of Maurice Bloomfield on the subject of "Rgveda Repetitions,"^{50a} a study of all the contexts in which a pāda or a verse occurred, became necessary, with very satisfactory results. Thus a critical and comparative outlook, which does not lose sight of the tradition or sampradāya, characterises the modern method of interpreting the Veda.⁵¹

VI

THE PLACE OF LEGEND IN NATIONAL LIFE

It must be noted that no story is actually told in the Rgveda, but many incidents and circumstances are definitely alluded to. Saramā and the Paṇis, Urvaśi

48. Cf. Interpretation of the Rgveda, Dr. Manilal Patel. Bhāratiya Vidyā Vol. I, p. 17 et seq. The contribution of various scholars, schools and commentaries have been discussed.

49. Wilson in his preface to the RV Translation. Colebrooke, Asiatic Researches (1805) VIII, p. 476.

50. Cf. The Veda and its Interpretation, Principal A. B. Dhruva. Mālavīya Commemoration Volume (BHU, 1932), pp. 447-58.

50a. The Repetitions "are of interest not only for the direct explanation of many a given passage, but also for a critical comparison and estimate of the repeated matter in a given hymn as confronted with that of all the other hymns which are concerned in these repetitions. These are considerably more important than the variants in other Vedic texts, interesting as these are for the history of schools, the development of the language, and the later growth of Brahmanical ideas." Rgveda Repetitions (HOS Vol. 20, p. xix, vol. 24 forms the 2nd part of the work).

51. Cf. Macdonell, The Principles to be followed in translating the Rgveda (Commemorative Essays presented to R. G. Bhandarkar, BORI, 1917), pp. 3-18.

and Purāvas legends are nearer being actual events than perhaps Śunaśśepa being yoked for sacrifice or Viśvāmitra having developed a hatred for Vasiṣṭha. Vasiṣṭha and Viśvāmitra each had enemies but it is not certain whether they were enemies of each other. While for the truthful happenings we turn our eyes to the most original document the R̥gveda, the gradual transformation which sometimes changed the complexion in toto is not without significance inasmuch as it reflects the cultural phases in the fortunes of the Aryans in India and their thorough assimilation with the native populace. The original purity of concept and character had had to be mixed up with the complicated and undeveloped notions that prevailed in the atmosphere of their new possessions. The same stories had to be retold and reinterpreted. Gods and men sat together at the sacrifices in the Vedic Age, but later the distance between god and man began to widen. Man expanded, propagated and became a problem for himself. Far removed from divinity he was naturally to doubt it. Fresh impetus had to be put into Vedic lore—thus grew the several strata of literature and legend which were evolved from time to time, spontaneously, to hold together the peoples and their beliefs.

Thus in the beginning, gods came to the earth often times; it was their sporting ground. But when the land became crowded with mortals, the visits of the immortals became few and far between. They had to be summoned with great ceremony and sacrifice or after severe self-mortification by a process called penance. It was the privilege of some, however, to visit the Immortals in heaven off and on for negotiations on behalf of mankind; a few celebrated kings were even honoured with invitations to help the gods in their fights against the demons. Later on this choice for divine favour also became a thing of the past. Gods became invisible and would of course favour their devotee as such, provided he faithfully discharged all his duties by them as required by the śāstras. When Gods disappeared from mortal approach, śāstras about them became more and more elaborate; thus worship of the God at home and in common with the others at temples became an art by itself substituting for the no longer tenable Sacrifice. As the community expanded, their wants became many and varied; their functions also differed accordingly. Their outlook now was more mundane. Now and then, of course, the hunger of the soul asserted itself; the monotony of existence, the transitoriness of life, birth and death, above all, the futility of appeal to an invisible God—these ideas began to sway over the mind of the commonalty. At such a time, the service rendered by the epics and the Purāṇas for enlivening the souls of the people can hardly be exaggerated. Here did Lomaharṣaṇa⁵² earn the gratitude of all, by presenting the ancient legends to the people in a manner that pleased their minds and whetted their hearts' yearning for a tangible knowledge, if not vision, of the Ultimate or the Absolute. The continuity of the teachings of the sacred Vedas was also established by the dictum—

52. The Vāyu Purāṇa justifies his name (I 16):

Lomāni harṣayāñcakre śrotṛpān yat subhāsitaiḥ /
Karmāṇā prathītas tena loke'smin Lomaharṣaṇaḥ //

Itihāsapurāṇābhyām Vedam samupabṛmhayet /
Bibhetyalpaśrutād vedo mām ayam prahared iti //⁵³

The Veda should be well amplified by means of Itihāsa and Purāṇa ; the Veda fears a man of little knowledge as he might maim it thereby.

Thus the popular mind was satisfied with the sanctity of the Epics and the Purāṇas as they were, logically, exhaustive commentaries of the Veda and its tradition. Even otherwise, the medium of legend to communicate religious and even philosophical ideas has been found fruitful through Ages. Nothing can exert greater credence on the human mind than when it is described as having happened. " Thus, indeed, it was " (Iti-ha-āsa) combines with narration, a stamp of authority. And when, now and then, an appeal is made to former authorities by means of statements like, Atrāpyudāharantimam itihāsam purāṇanam etc., the belief is firmly rooted. Philosophers, who claim to think of God from a higher plane on the strength of having imbibed the quintessence of worldly experience separating the grain from the chaff, are prone to set less value to the legends, as, they say, for instance, Plato would allow no foothold for the fanciful myths about gods and angels in his ideal State. But, for the average man with his preoccupations—and his class forms the teeming millions—a set of prepared ideas about the Supreme Power is necessary, ideas which emanate from thinkers or prophets who have had communion with the Holy God. The average man, again, would feel gratified to find some concrete story on which his Faith can lay anchor, or even some concrete object on which he can superimpose all his conception of God, the Gracious and the All-powerful. This deep yearning of the soul is represented by what Prof. Otto calls the " numinous " in man, which feels or realises and is fascinated by the adbhuta and the acintya in God (Mysterium tremendum) ; and which ultimately leads him to rapturous emotions of love and surrender (bhakti) to the great God.⁵⁴ The temple and the church on the one hand and the Sāgas and the Epics on the other have proved to be substantial contributions to foster the " numinous," and have, therefore, very rightly deserved the popularity they enjoy. If a nation is to be united it is by the TRADITION it inherits and cherishes. And India's unshakable belief and regard for tradition has been writ large in the Great Epics and in the Purāṇas and has been upheld by the sky-scraping towers of temples.

One great point about Itihāsa is that it appeals to all classes. Unfortunately, India is torn by an abuse of the Caste System. Whether the Caste System (cātur-varṇya) was responsible for the degradation of Indian Society, or an abuse thereof, is a matter of opinion. All the same, the distinction of varṇa (caste) by the accident of birth and not by the actuality of profession has been the bane of our social structure. True, there is the doctrine of Karma to support the distinction by birth. It is agelong and has been a potent factor of our Religion. But our

53. Mbh. I 267.

54. Cf. M. Yāmnachārya, Prof. Rudolf Otto's concept of the " Numinous " and its relation to Indian Thought. (Read before the XIX Session of the Indian Philosophical Congress and published by Mysore U. J. Vol. VII, No. 2, March 1947).

Religion and our Country are in a transitional stage. A New Order of things is inevitable. And God's original order conveyed in the following statement :—

Na viśeṣo'sti varṇānām sarvam brāhmanam idam jagat /
Brahmaṇā pūrvasṛṣṭam hi karmabhir varṇatām gatam //

"There is no distinction of castes. This world, which, as created by Brahmā, was at first entirely Brāhmanic, has become divided into classes in consequence of men's deeds."—deserves to be reharnessed for the good of humanity. Such upheavels have come upon us often times and the Smṛtis and the Śāstras have been alive for the changes and have conformed to them; e.g. Parāśara-smṛti is to be followed in Kali-yuga, and not Manu, the first law-giver (Kalau Pārāśaraḥ smṛtaḥ). A fresh structure has to be built upon old traditions; the great literature of the ancients, of which of course we can always be proud, has to be read in a new light which has just radiated through the horizon.

The sociological aspect of the legends is as important as their religious aspect. In them are reflected the successive stages of culture and civilisation. The Itihāsa-purāṇa as revealed in the Vedic texts gives us a picture of ancient Society, at least in its outlines. The next stages are marked by the appearance of the Epics, of the Purāṇas and of belles-lettres, these categories being for the most part contemporaneous in the few centuries that preceded and succeeded the Christian era.

A third aspect of the legend is didactic. Through the stories of the lives of great men and through the teachings of sages and seers retold in simple mould and easy language, the Itihāsa provided ethical instruction to society, together with philosophical doctrines.

Incidental to these aspects, much miscellaneous matter also found its way into the Purāṇas like the genealogies of kings, their rule over various kingdoms of the historic and prehistoric past, the rivers and mountains, more than all the holy spots situated on them (tīrthas) etc. so much so that the Purāṇas developed a technique of their own, which expressed itself in the five characteristics :—

Sargaś ca pratisargaś ca vaṁśo manvantarāṇi ca /
Vamśānucaritam ceti Purāṇam pañcalakṣaṇam //

—Creation; re-creation i.e. periodical annihilation and renewal of the worlds; genealogy (of gods and ṛṣis); the millennia i.e. the great periods each of which has a Manu or primal ancestor of the human race; and the history of the dynasties viz. early and later dynasties whose origin is traced back to the sun (solar dynasty) and the moon (lunar dynasty).⁵⁵ Thus we see that the legendary tradition, expressed through the medium of the Epics and the Purāṇas, knit itself into the life of Society, being a source at once of pleasure and instruction.

55. Mbh. XII 188.10. Quoted by Muir as a motto for his first volume OST. see back of title page (3rd edn. 1890).

56. Cf. Winternitz HIL I p. 502 and note. The śloka is found in the more important Purāṇas, in Amarakośa and other lexicons.

VII

THE AGE OF THE R̥GVEDA

A definite age for the RV in terms of years or even centuries before our time is not possible to fix, as is revealed by the most laborious enquiry up to now. The subject is hackneyed enough ; nevertheless, every scholar permits himself to enter into the subject, for, at one time or other in the course of his study, he is sure to wonder within his mind, what might be the age of the RV, which happens to be oldest literary monument of the Human Race ! In answer to this question, it is wise, perhaps, to say : RV is the oldest in age among literary productions, and be content.

What with the doctrine of Revelation (apauruṣeyatva) which recognised nothing like a beginning for the Veda, and with the data provided by the theory of yuga and mahāyuga, pralaya and mahāpralaya, the earthly year and the celestial year and so on ; what with, on the other hand, the linguistic, historical, archaeological and astronomical evidences ransacked and wrested from their hidings with marvellous genius, industry and tact by the great scholars of the nineteenth and twentieth centuries—the Age of the RV is still a mirage to grapple with. The world of scholars bestirred itself once again after the discovery of the cuneiform tablets at Tel-el-Amarna in Upper Egypt and the discovery of the Inscriptions at Boghaz-Koi (North Mesopotamia) dating from 1600 to 1400 B.C.⁵⁷ They speak of names of Mitani kings with the prefix “Arta” which is reminiscent of Vedic R̥ta; and reference is found to the Vedic gods, Mitra, Varuṇa, Indra and Nāsatyau. This raised problems not only concerning the age of the RV, but also regarding the original home of the Aryans and the theory of their migration. In the opinion of Keith,⁵⁸ “misplaced confidence in the Parsi tradition which dates Zoroaster three hundred years before Alexander,⁵⁹ has resulted in endless confusion and difficulty.”

On the evidence of the language of the Avesta which bears close resemblance to that of the RV, the common belief is that the Aryans came down to Iran from their original home, Central Asia, and then a branch of theirs moved on to India. The activities of the Indian branch, the chief one being the compilation of RV Samhitā, began after their separation from the Iranian Settlements. The acceptance of this view has put an unjustly severe restraint on Vedic chronology. To squeeze in so much of literature and history from Zarathushtra's date—the R̥gvedic compilation, the growth of the Brāhmaṇas, the Sūtras and the Upaniṣads, Yāska, Pāṇini, Mahāvīra, the Buddha, our Epics, and all before Alexander invaded India : 326 B.C.—is impossible ! Consider, on the other hand, the possibility of 57. Cf. Bloomfield, Rel. Veda, pp. 11-12. Keith RPV, pp. 5, 83, 617, Wintrenitz HIL pp. 304-6, Dhalla, HZ pp. 9, 47, 269, 270.

58. Bhand. Comm. Vol. Keith, Early History of the Indo- Iranians, pp. 81-92.

59. Date of Zoroaster according to tradition : 660-583 B.C. Dhalla states that Zarathushtra's date of birth is placed anywhere between 600 B.C. and 6000 B.C. HZ p. 13.

the migration of a branch of the Aryans westward into Iran from India.⁶⁰ The original home of the Aryans might have been in India itself or they might have come to India through some route, not necessarily Khyber. That is a major problem. At any rate having had a sufficiently long and comfortable life in the Land of the Five or Seven Rivers (Punjab and N.W.F.), one branch, evidently the dissenters, went westwards, whereas another spread eastward to Madhya-deśa and further to Bengal and down to the South. After the western branch migrated to Iran, soon or late, rose Zoroaster; the Gāthās were sung in the language known as Avesta. Even then there should be no objection to the close resemblances between the Vedic and Avestic languages. Just as the eastern branch came in contact with the original inhabitants and underwent transformation in thought and doing, so also the Iranian section mingled with the native populace and became subject to new influences. Differences grew; the outlook changed; they became poles apart. Conflict and conquest followed as a natural result. Remembering their old hatred, as it were, there were in historic times a series of invasions and depredations back on their old home, India.

Now comes the discovery of the Indus Valley civilization⁶¹ envisaged by the finds at Harappa and Mohenjodaro. No definite decision has yet been reached regarding its age in general or its age in relation to RV in particular. The most generally accepted view up to now is that it is pre-Rgvedic; some hold that it is based on the Rgvedic civilization only and that the unearthed cities and the seals betray contemporaneity with features and events of Rgvedic life. There is a third postulate that the I-V Culture is entirely Dravidian in character. It is beside the present purpose to go into a discussion of the various problems and controversies, when the entire study thereof is still in a nebulous condition. The position is clearly set forth in the following passage:

"The finds unearthed at the prehistoric sites provide many interesting, important and intriguing points such as the date of the civilization; its authorship—whether it is Aryan, pre-Aryan, Dravidian or Sumerian etc.; its relationship with

60. Keith is not unfavourable. Cf. RPV. 5-7, "we are, therefore, still left without any definite evidence to aid us in dating the distinction of Aryan into Iranian and Indian, and we should probably revise our conception of this division." Ibid. p. 617. Winternitz is quite favourable "We shall have to assume that, just as there were Aryan immigrations into India from the west, there must have been isolated migrations back to the west." HIL, p. 305. On the other hand, Dhalla claims: Of the various sections of the Aryan family, the ancestors of those that later became known in history as the Indians and the Iranians lived longest and closest together in Eastern Iran. They sacrificed to the same gods and entertained the same view of life on earth. They separated at a later period and a group turned to the south, crossed the Hindukush and entered the Punjab by about 2000 B.C.

.....Of the various groups that separated from the main stock at different times, the Iranian group preserved most faithfully the original name of the primeval home of the Aryans. The place of residence had changed, surroundings had altered beyond recognition and the communities that lived and shared life with them had gone. But the deeply cherished name AIRYANA-VAYEJAH (The Stem-Land of the Aryans) had been indelibly impressed on their minds." HZ p. 10. On p. xxxi he says: "The time when Zoroaster flourished is a moot question. The approximate date at which he lived is 1000 B.C."

61. One is greatly indebted to Dr. R. N. Dandekar for a very useful bibliography on the I-V civilization. Vide his "Vedic Bibliography" (NIA publication, Bombay, 1946) Sections 156-162 or pp. 281-303.

other cultures ; its extent ; the religion and culture disclosed by it ; the Indus Script, etc." And " a somewhat satisfactory solution of these problems can be obtained when we discover strata bearing on Vedic settlements and showing their relative chronological position to the Indus civilization. Excavation along the banks of Sarasvatī and Dr̥ṣadvatī in the homeland of the Vedic Aryans will go a long way in providing ample valuable material. The satisfactory decipherment of the Indus Script which has hitherto baffled all attempts will give an unimpeachable and incontrovertible piece of evidence. Scholars have so long approached the problem with preconceived notions and consequently have read their own theories into the so-called Indus Seal writings. The discovery of a bi-lingual inscription will undoubtedly supply us with a clue to solve the mystery which is shrouding the problems."⁶²

Reverting to the Age of the R̥gveda,⁶³ we can only register the dates assigned by various scholars from 1000 B.C. to 25000 B.C. Max Müller assigned 1500-1200, Weber 16th cent., Haug 2400-1400, Whitney 2000-1400, Kaegi 2000-1500, Winternitz, 2500 or 2000-750 or 500, Jacobi 4500-2500, Tilak 6000, Venkatesvara 11,000 and A.C. Dās 25,000 etc.—all before Christ. It is well to recall a statement made by Max Müller himself long ago. " It is far better to show the different layers of thought that produced the Vedic Religion, and thus to give an approximate idea of its long growth, than to attempt to measure it by years or centuries, which can never be more than guess work."⁶⁴ What applies to Vedic Thought applies to Vedic Literature as well.

VIII

RGVEDIC LEGENDS

These are numerous indeed. Śaunaka's Bṛhaddevatā is a land-mark in the study of the legends as it is the most ancient text to narrate, briefly of course, as many as forty legends, which are amplifications of the R̥gvedic nucleus. The Sarvānukramaṇī of Kātyāyana offers similar material ; Śaḍguruśiṣya expands many of the legends. Finally, Sāyaṇa's prefatory notes to the hymns referring to past stories are very helpful.

With a survey of Sāyaṇa's commentary, the vast legendary matter could be gathered. Over seventy-five adventures of Indra are mentioned. Apart from the display of his strength against his adversaries, Indra, as is well-known, freely and bounteously bestows wealth upon the sacrificer. He also helps people in distress. In this respect, the record of the Aśvins is as bright if not brighter. They are the divine physicians and surgeons who have made themselves responsible for the well-being of all in their province. They supply artificial legs to those who are wounded in battle, they save people from shipwreck and remove blindness and 62. A. D. Pusalkar, Indus Valley Civilization, Bhāratiya Vidyā, Vol. III, Part I, pp. 21-22.

63. For a full discussion, vide Winternitz HIL I pp. 290-310. Cf. also Radhakrishnan Eastern Religion and Western Thought, pp. 119-20 fn.

64. Max Müller, Hibbert Lectures, p. 156.

barrenness. They cure leprosy and rescue those caught in the fire but, what is more wonderful, they transplant the head of a horse on the human body and again replace the original head. These achievements are remarkable and striking in their amazing similarity to the achievements of the latest researches in medicine and surgery.

Besides the exploits of individual deities as above illustrated, 29 legends of a more general character could be noted. They are as follows :—

1. Saramā I 6.5.
Śunaśśepa I 24.1.
Kakṣīvat and Svanaya I 125.
Dīrghatamas I 147.
5. Agastya and Lopāmudrā I 179.
Grtsamada II 12.
Vasiṣṭha and Viśvāmitra III 53, VII 33 etc.
The Descent of Soma III 43.
Vāmadeva IV 18.
10. Tryarūpa and Vṛṣa Jāna V 2.
Birth of Agni V 11.
Śyāvāśva V 52.
Saptavadhri V 78.
Bṛbu and Bharadvāja VI 45.
15. Rjīśvan and Atiyāja VI 52.
Sarasvatī and Vadhryaśva VI 61.
Viṣṇu's three strides VI 69.
Birth of Bṛhaspati VI 71.
King Sudās VII 18 etc.
20. Nahuṣa VII 95.
Asaṅga VIII 1, 33.
Apālā VIII 91.
Kutsa X 38 (I 33, 51, 97 etc.)
King Asamāti and the four priests X 57-60.
25. Nābhānediṣṭha X 61, 62.
Vṛṣākapi X 86.
Urvaśī and Purūravas X 95.
Devāpi and Śantanu X 98.
Naciketas X 185.

The "dānastutis" praising Pākasthāman, Kuruṅga, Kaśu, Tirindira, Trasadasyu, Citra, Varu, Pṛthuśravas, Rkṣa and Aśvamedha, Indrota and Atithigva etc. (VIII Maṇḍala) should naturally refer to events which led to the gifts and their praise, but they are not counted in the above list as they afford, historically, little matter for study. Similarly, the various adventures of Indra and the Aśvins, somehow, were not followed up in later literature. It may however be of interest to recall some of them here : they make a short biography of the gods concerned.

Indra :—Maruts are his allies (I 6.7, 33.4),⁶⁵ Indra born as Kuśika's son (I 10.11) destorys demon cities (I 11.4), slays vala and releases cattle (11.5), kills Śuṣṇa (11.7), Indra-Vṛtra fight narrated in some detail (I 32), clove the cloud, cast the water down, killed Vṛtra, recovered the kine from the Paṇis, won the Soma—all allied with the Maruts; Vṛtra's followers fled, Indra was encouraged by the Nava-gvas (1.33), Maruts stood fast by Indra when all others fled (51.2) once Indra almost collapsed but recovered with a draught of Soma (52.10). Indra protected Kutsa, defended Daśadyu, redeemed Śvaitya (33.14-15), helped Angiras, Atri and Vimala (51.3), destroyed the cities of Pipru and well defended Rjīśvan, defended Kutsa against Śuṣṇa, destroyed Śambara in defence of Atithigva, trod upon the demon Arbuda (51.6), helped the sage Vimada (51.9), delights at the sacrifice of Śāryāta, gave Vṛṣaya to Kakṣivat (51.12-13), broke through the defences of Bala (52.5), slew Namuci (53.7), Karañja and Parṇaya in the cause of Atithigva, demolished the cities of Vaṅgrda (53.8), overthrew 20 kings and their 60079 followers (53.9), helped Tūrvayāna and others (53.10) etc., etc. To mention a few more noted recipients of Indra's favour—Turvaśa, Turviti, Nodhas, Etaśa, Purukutsa, Vṛṣāgir's five sons Rjraśva, Ambariṣa, Sahadeva, Bhayamāna and Surādhas, Trasadasyu, Divodaśa and Dabhiti etc., etc. Indra fixed the wandering mountains, set the Sun to light up the caves of the Paṇis, pierced thrice seven table-lands heaped together, sought Viṣṇu's help to kill Vṛtra, employed Trita to fashion his weapons, permitted himself to be born as son of the demoness Vikuṇṭhā—these are some of Indra's deeds chosen for their variety and peculiar interest.

Vṛtra, Bala and Śambara are his powerful enemies. A few others may be noted : the demon Kṛṣṇa and his 10000, Viśvarūpa son of Tvaṣṭr, Uraṇa of 99 arms, Aśna and Rudhikra, Dhuni and Cumuri, struck Krivi and sent him to eternal slumber, hurled the bolt against the godless Piyu, overthrew 90 enemy cities with one effort, subjugated the turbulent Bheda etc.

The Aśvins repair men's faults thrice a day, Sūryā elected them for her husbands, they brought wealth to Sudās, made a barren cow give milk, rendered help to Rebha, Vandana, Kaṇva, Bhujiyu (saved from shipwreck), Karkandhu Vayya, Śucanti, Atri (saved from fire), Prṣnigu, Parāvṛj, Vasiṣṭha, Kutsa, Viśpalā,⁶⁶ Vaśa, Dirghaśravas, Kakṣivat, Māndhātṛ, Bharadvāja, Turviti, Dabhiti, Dhvasanti, Purusanti, Vadhrimati, Jahnu, Jāhuṣa etc. etc., cured Ghoṣā of leprosy and she could marry, gave protection to Dirghatamas, removed his blindness and saved him from the persecution of his servants, won the 1000 Rk-praise of Dakṣa. etc.

In the interpretation of the legends, Bloomfield set forth some salient principles⁶⁷ The first requisite is to deal with the materials which the Vedic texts offer us as a

65. The references are to RV Maṇḍala, śukta, stanza. Maṇḍala is always shown in Roman figures. The stories are either suggested in the stanzas referred to or are stated by authorities in connection with the stanzas.

66. Bloomfield remarked "Even animals are helped or cured by them. In one instance, they perform a cure calculated to make green with envy even the most skilled of modern veterinary surgeons, if by any chance, they should hear of it. When the racing mare Viśpalā breaks a leg, they put an iron one in its place; with that she handily wins the race! Rel. Ved. p. 118.

67. JAOS Vol. XV (1891) pp. 143 et seq. Contributions to the interpretation of the Veda : third series. Earlier contributions, JAOS Vol. XIII, Am. JPh. Vols. VII and IX.

story, an itihāsa or ākhyāna, which is their face value. There is, frankly speaking, nothing which justifies the interpreter in looking for anthropomorphic or theriomorphic motives at the bottom of it. If these ever existed, they have vanished from record. Why should they, indeed, have existed? Indra, the demiurge of the Vedic texts, encounters demons, for instance, and deals with them according to the fancy of the story-teller. Indra, to be sure, is very largely a storm-God who attacks the clouds and other natural phenomena personified as demons; but, he is also the heroic person INDRA and, in his latter capacity the very one to become embroiled with all sorts of uncanny beings such as inhabited the fancy of the Vedic people. There is much truth in this dictum. Let us take an instance: the Hounds of Yama, Śyāma and Śabala. The mythologists would not permit them to be fancied as hounds at all. Bloomfield himself identifies them as the Sun and the Moon. Others see the west wind and the south wind in them. Similarly, Saramā is the Storm-Goddess, her sons, Sārameyau, gods of wind. Vasiṣṭha is no other than the Sun, being the son of Urvaśī who is no other than the Dawn. In the opinion of another scholar, the Eclipse Code of the R̥gvedic Aryans is revealed in the Śunaśśepa hymns.⁶⁸ The author says, "The fundamental cycle of the Śunaśśepa hymns is one of 2760 days of eight nodal years. The basis of this inference is the number of letters in the seven hymns taken together which is 2768." Further, "According to the legend of Śunaśśepa, Rohita wandered in the wild for seven years, this period amounts to 7×354.4 or 2480.4 days. Rohita paid 300 cows to Ajigarta for complete liberation. In Vedic phraseology a cow means a day (vide Gavām-ayana by Dr. Shama Sastry). Therefore 300 cows mean 300 days. Hence the total Rohita period amounts to 2480.4 days... All these several values deduced from independent sets of data agree closely among themselves and support the inference that the basic period of the R̥gvedic eclipse cycle was 188 Parvas.'

The erudition and imagination behind these views of the specialists cannot and need not be denied. If the hymns originally meant it all is a question which scholars have patiently to reflect upon. The rational view is that RV is a human document, the gods are man-made, they have human characteristics, in other words they are conceived in a human mould.⁶⁹ Therefore it is fair that they and their lives have primarily to be looked at from the stand-point of human values. If the hymns contemplated any mythical motive that the Hounds of Heaven are the Sun and the Moon, or that Saramā is the Storm-Goddess or Vasiṣṭha is the Sun, one wonders why the Veda would not state it; what harm? On the other hand, what harm is there to believe that there were two real hounds in the service of Yama; they, like so many other supernatural or superhuman things, are justified in their existence, as conceived by the Vedic folk. One, perhaps, need not and should not strain so much regarding identities. Vedic Faith has painted a certain picture of heaven. Some of its lines may point to Nature or Allegory or Sky. Still there would remain a large part of it to understand which we have to invoke Faith. Why not assign everything to Faith and be pleased with a state of things, reported as having existed once upon a time (iti-ha-āsa)? No purpose is served by strained identifications. What special achievement of fancy of the Vedic poet it was to view the SUN and MOON, who are the very Light of our existence, as the hounds of Yama, and why exert to reconcile the canine attributes with those world-sustaining qualities of the Heavenly Ones? It is hard to understand how Bloomfield departed from his own principle, above-mentioned. The case is strong, however, to set human values in the first place.

68. M. Raja Rao, The Eclipse Code of the R̥gvedic Aryans as revealed in Śunaśśepa hymns and Brāhmaṇas. PO. Vol. VI (1942) pp. 1-26. Rohita wandered for 6 years according to AB and for 7 according to Śāṅkhī. Śr. S. Printer's devil in multiplication, it should be 2486.8. It is wonderful coincidence. I am reminded of another. The RV Samhitā counts syllables 432,000 which is the extent of Kali-yuga in years, curiously (A Govindācārya-swāmin). In the Brāhmaṇas, many numerical coincidences between several sacrificial aspects and the seasons, years and months etc. are found or forced. In the chapter on Śunaśśepa following, it is pointed out that there is no correspondence at all between the hymns and the Śunaśśepa legend. The hymns are ascribed, by tradition, to his seership and not with reference to the circumstances of the Seer's life.

69. Cf. M. Hirianna, Outlines of Indian Philosophy, p. 31.

In the second place, Bloomfield recommends giving up the belief that the allusions to the story which may be gathered from the scattered mantras are the only true material for its reconstruction. He would like to view the entire evidence as one whole—evidence provided by the legends of the Brāhmaṇas and the Sūtras as well, because they would be based on the same conception as the mantras. Ad hoc touches, which are inevitable while handing the story from person to person, inspired by practical matters like sacrifice and witchcraft, have to be dealt with what may be called tact. "The proper attitude is," Bloomfield declares, "on the one hand, neither implicit faith in every detail of the connected legends and in every symbolic employment of the legend in ritualistic practice; on the other hand, a growing faith in the synchronism of mantra, brāhmaṇa and sūtra. As far as the first two are concerned, the writer is more and more inclined to the belief that mantra and brāhmaṇa are for the least part chronological distinctions, that they represent two modes of literary activity and two modes of literary speech, which are largely contemporaneous, the mantras being the earliest lyric and the brāhmaṇas, the earliest epic-didactic manifestation of the same cycle of thought. Both forms existed together, for aught we know, from the earliest times, only the redaction of the mantra-collections in their present arrangement seems on the whole to have preceded the redaction of the brāhmaṇas. At any rate, I, for my part, am incapable of believing that even a single Vedic hymn was ever composed without reference to ritual application, and without that environment of legendary report which we find in a no doubt exaggerated and distended form in the Brāhmaṇas and Sūtras." The postulates herein embodied are difficult of acceptance. Firstly mantra and brāhmaṇa are largely contemporaneous and they are for the least part chronological distinctions. The mantras and brāhmaṇas may have co-existed but we have to consider the texts that have been handed down to us. The mantra did not admit the play of a later hand, while the Brāhmaṇa did not escape it. The Śunaśsepa legend is an example. The oldest Brāhmaṇa and a text that is nearest the original hymns is the Aitareya. While the RV makes the barest mention of the legend, there is a full and finished narrative thereof in the AB. From the point of view of historical development, the elaboration is remarkable and must presuppose certain intermediate stages to justify the inclusion of Hariścandra's episode in the beginning and Viśvāmitra's at the end. Macdonell and Winternitz are of opinion that there is a wide gap of time between the mantra age and brāhmaṇa age.⁷⁰ That no hymn of the Veda was ever composed without reference to ritual application is only an argument advanced by its author for the occasion; for, it is universally acknowledged that the hymns of the RV are poetry first and then everything else. In them we find "the first outpourings of the human mind, the glow of poetry, the rapture at nature's loveliness and mystery."⁷¹ Bloomfield's reference to tact in handling the evidence supplied by the various texts of different ages is instructive. It stands to reason that in the historical study of the evolution of a legend there ought to be no place for preconceived notions. The material should be assessed just as it is presented, the changes noted from the earlier stage to a later stage and a logical conclusion established. For example, to develop a line of thought that all along the literature of ancient India, the brāhmanic tradition has held sway, the priestly class saw to its supremacy everywhere, in literature as well as in Society⁷²:—these are impressions formed in the 19th and 20th centuries about things that transpired in ancient times; they are, in Bloomfield's own expression, "judgments based upon schematic principles." Verily so. The authors of such interpretations forget to assess the conditions of the times which resulted in this or that happening. One thing stands out for all time and against all dissection and scrutiny of the ancient past. In the fourfold classification of society—whether on the basis of birth or profession—the precedence was, by unanimous approval, established as Brāhmaṇa, Kṣatriya, Vaiśya and Śūdra. Each class was expected to discharge its specific duties. The system was welcome and so long as every one adhered to his dharma, there could be no room for unhappiness or unrest. With the convulsions of time, however dharma deteriorated everywhere. Society, under extraneous circumstances, was subject to authoritarian influences of alien cultures, alien customs, alien thought. The whole outlook changed. Looking back from the threshold of a New World, to pass judgment on the ancient past betrays a serious want of "tact."

This section may close with two observations: (1) the Rgvedic Legends, if not the whole Samhitā, may be viewed from the stand-point of human values. They inculcate ideas and describe deeds which are nearest to the immediate well-being of mankind. Other connotations are either secondary or accidental. (2) The whole of Ancient Culture, as well as Rgvedic, may be viewed in proper perspective, having regard to conditions of the Age under study. A view through the telescope,

70. The subject is fully discussed in a subsequent chapter.

71. Nehru, Discovery of India (Signet Press), Calcutta, 1946, p. 78. An authority selected at random only. Older scholars like Max Müller, Macdonell and others have appreciated the poetical merit of RV hymns.

72. Western scholarship, probably without exception, has succumbed to this sort of impression, in spite of the fact that they profess a dispassionate outlook. They are all praise for so many meritorious features in Ancient Indian Culture, which enjoyed a social solidarity and which had a Dharma to recommend for all time. Why single out one class to account for the ills of the present age for which the whole world, native and alien, is responsible?

fixed on the threshold of a New World, and across a gulf of Time extending to tens of centuries, becomes perforce defective and dangerous.

IX

LESSONS FROM THE LEGENDS

The Legends of the RV provide a great variety. The fight between the gods and demons and the wars of kings signify a state of immense action in which the entire man power was engaged. In time of peace the whole community sacrificed to the agents of their victory, glory and happiness, whom they called gods. And the gods freely mixed with mortals. They exchanged favours⁷³: men sacrificed to please the gods with the soma and the puroḍāśa; in return, they gave them reward in kind, comfort and progeny. The R̥gvedic seer appeals for gods' favour in a variety of ways, with such persuasive wit as will move the most unwilling god shower his best favours on him. And the gods were full of solicitude for mankind as is evident from the innumerable instances of succour given by Indra and the Aśvins, recorded in the previous section. The mission of Saramā is an example of how on such occasions uprightness and sagacity will pay. Śunaśśepa illustrates the faith of man and the grace of God. In Vasiṣṭha, one sees the height of excellence that Man could reach and in Viśvāmitra the glory of perfection that Man could achieve by his own endeavour (puruṣa-kāra). Their hatred towards each other, if at all, was transitory; it is possible to deny it, but nothing unnatural if they have momentarily given in to human passions. All stories that developed in later times must be ascribed to fancy. What more lessons need we look for in the legends, than an exhortation to be strong and brave warriors, to protect the distressed, to be generous and solicitous to one another, to give and to take gifts, to be truthful and be free from jealousy, in short, to respect God and to love Man?

There are other legends indicated in RV which pertain to the lives of individual personages. They savour of an unethical element which might have pervaded in the society of those days. One hears the story of Vasiṣṭha's birth with a sense of disappointment at the nakedness of a lustful act. The birth of other eminent sages as well, is shrouded in mystery. Prajāpati, desirous of progeny, conducted a 3-year sacrifice in the presence of all gods.⁷⁴ There came the goddess of Speech (Vāc) in bodily form. Seeing her, semen effused from both Ka (Prajāpati) and Varuṇa. Vāyu by chance blew it into the Fire; from the flames was Bhṛgu born and from the cinders, Aṅgiras. But Vāc, on seeing the two sons, said to Prajāpati, "May a third seer also, in addition to these two, be born to me as a son." "So be it," said the Creator. Then the seer Atri was born, equal in splendour to Sun and Fire. Coming to more human affairs, there is the following story of the birth

73. Raghuvamśa :

Dudoha gām sa yajñāya sasyāya Maghavā divam /
Sampadvini mayenobhau dadhatu bhuvanadvayam //

74. BD V 97-101 (HOS Vol. 5).

of Dirghatamas.⁷⁵ Once there were two sages called Ucathya and Brhaspati. The former had a wife named Mamatā. She was enceinte. But Brhaspati got fascinated and enjoyed with her. At the time of the effusion of semen, the one already inside the womb cried out, "O Sage, do not discharge. I am here first and may you not cause an admixture of seed." Controlling himself with great difficulty, Brhaspati cursed the seed in the womb that, because it caused frustration to his impulse, it should be born blind and be so for long. Thus cursed, Dirghatamas was born of Mamatā. After birth he praised Agni and he was pleased to remove the blindness. The sage became a celebrated Seer of hymns. Viśvāmitra's birth also is not free from complicity. He was born of Gadhi's wife through the grace of the son-in-law, R̥cika, who, on request, prepared the holy caru for his mother-in-law as well as for his wife.⁷⁶ The Indra-Ahalyā episode is well-known.⁷⁷ Several more instances of "ethical aberrations," as Hopkins calls them⁷⁸ may be added, but no need. It must undoubtedly be confessed that so long as humanity is subject to the call of the lower passions, which is so in God's dispensation ever since Creation, this ethical aspect remains the same in all ages and at all climes. It is perhaps a challenge that God has thrown out before Man. The merit lies in accepting it and transcending high above the ordinary. The ancient śāstras have recognised these aberrations as examples to be avoided only, and never to be followed. "Though man ought to imitate the seers and gods, yet man may not imitate their misdeemeanors, because those divine beings had more lustre than men today and being so glorious they might do what ordinary men may not do."⁷⁹ Says an epic sage: "Cease to cite these famous transgressions...do thyself what is suitable and proper."⁸⁰ Let us hear Colebrooke: "The aberrations of the human mind are a part of its history. It is neither uninteresting nor useless, to ascertain what it is that ingenious men have done, and contemplative minds have thought, in former times, even where they have erred, especially where their error had been graced by elegance, or redeemed by tasteful fancy. Mythology then, however futile, must, for those reasons, be noticed. It influences the manners, it pervades the literature of nations which have admitted it."⁸¹ It will be fitting to conclude with the views on Mythology, so well and frankly expressed by the first gentleman of India⁸² today, Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru:

"Mythology affected me in much the same way. If people believed in the factual contents of these stories, the whole thing was absurd and

75. Sāyaṇa's prefatory note to RV I 147.3.

76. See infra ch. IV, the story is related in Mbh. and Hari.

77. Ahalyā is first mentioned in the Brāhmaṇas (Ahalyāyājñarah). ŚB III 3.4.18, JB ii. 79, ŚaṅB I 1. Evolution of the Myth. See Jhā Com. Vol., pp. 427-33. Article by Dhirendra Varma.

78. Hopkins, Ethics of India, title of ch. VIII.

79. Ibid. p. 13, cf. Kaus. Up. 3.1., ApDhS II 13.8 seq., GDhS I 1.3-4. (Indra is regarded as sinless, nevertheless, RV I 129.5 (anenas)).

80. Ibid., p. 55, cf. Mbh. XII 291-17, 322.20.

Kṛtāni yāni karmāṇi daivatāir munibhiḥ tathā /
Na caret tāni dharmātmā śrutvā cāpi na kutsayet //
Aham anyair upalabdhaiḥ kīrtitaiḥ ca vyatikramaiḥ /
Peśalam cānurūpam ca kartavyam hitam ātmanah //

81. H. T. Colebrooke, Miscellaneous Essays, Vol. I, p. 4.

82. Mahatma Gaṇḍhī is above rank, indeed.

ridiculous. But as soon as one ceased believing in them, they appeared in a new light, a new beauty, a wonderful flowering of a richly endowed imagination, full of human lessons. No one believes now in the stories of Greek gods and goddesses and so, without any difficulty, we can admire them and they become part of our mental heritage. But if we had to believe in them what a burden it would be, and how, oppressed by this weight of belief, we would often miss their beauty. Indian mythology is richer, vaster, very beautiful and full of meaning. I have often wondered what manner of men and women they were who gave shape to these bright dreams and lovely fancies, and out of what gold mine of thought and imagination they dug them out."⁸³

83. Discovery of India, p. 77.

CHAPTER I

THE LEGEND OF SARAMĀ

Saramā is generally regarded as the dog of heaven, Deva-śunī. But nowhere in the R̥gveda is she referred to belong to the canine species.¹ She is only Indra's messenger (Indrasya dūtī—RV 10.108.2). That she is the mother of dogs appears to be a later belief originating in the word Sārameyau (Yama's hounds) which sounds like a matronymic from Saramā, "Saramā's offspring." Yāska refers to her as devaśunī² ('the divine bitch'). The later Vedic commentators indeed follow him.³ The Brhaddevatā⁴ spins a long story, according to which, Indra deposes Saramā to find out his cattle lifted and hidden by a demon tribe called the Paṇis. Saramā crosses the big river Rasā and succeeds in finding out Indra's cattle, but falls a victim to the temptations of the Paṇis, drinks milk offered by them, returns and on enquiry denies all knowledge of the kine or the Paṇis. Indra gives her a kick, she runs vomiting the milk, Indra follows the track and vanquishes the offenders, the cattle are recovered. The BD account thus casts a reflection on the character of Saramā. But the version in the Jaiminiya Brāhmaṇa⁵ is different,

1. This fact has been noticed by many scholars. Max Müller, ASL 2. p. 467. Keith RPV, p. 192. Macdonell VM p. 151, E. D. Perry, JAOS, 11. p. 141. E. I. Thomas, VH, p. 51.

2. Nir. 11.25.

3. Perhaps by chance, BD alone does not call her śunī anywhere. On the other hand, the same work counts her among the Brahmvādīnīs (female seers), BD 2.82-84.

4. BD 7.24-36.

5. JB 2.438-440.

Here is the text as given by Hanns Oertel in JAOS 19 2nd half, pp. 99-100—J.B.2.438-1—atha ha vai paṇayo nāmā'surā devānām go-rakṣā āsuh. tābhir athā'patastuh. tā ha rasāyām nirudhya valenā'pi dadhuh. 2. Devā atikupya lapuṣṣu sarpā'mā no gā anvicche'ti. tathe'ti.
 Sa hā'nuprapāta. 3. tā hā'nvājagāma rasāyām antarvalenā'pīhitāh. tasmai hā'nvāgatāya sarpiḥ kṣīram āmīkṣām dadhī'tyetaḍ upanidadhuh. tasya ha suhita āsa. tam ho'eus supar-nā'sa eva te balir bhaviṣyaty etaḍ annam mā nah pravoca iti. 4. sā ha punar āpāpāta. tam ho'eus suparnā'vido gā itī. Kā kīrtīś cit gavām itī ho'vāca. 5. eṣaiva kīrtir gavām itī tasya he'ndro galam pīḍayan uvāca goṣv evā'ham kila tavo'suṣo mukham itī. sa ha dadhidrapsam vā'mīkṣām vo'dāsa. so'yam babhūva yo'yam vasantā bhūtīkaḥ prajāyate. 6. tam ha tac chaśpā'slilajanma te jīvanam bhūyād yo no gā anuvīdyā tā na pravoca iti. tasya hā'tad grāmasya jaghanārdhe yat pāpīṣṭham taj jīvanam.

439.1 te saramām abruvan sarama imā nas tvam gā anvicche'ti. tathe'ti sā hā'nupra-sasāra. sā ha rasām ājagāma. 2. tām ho'vāca pṛṣṭve tvā gādā me bhaviṣyati'ti plavasva me'ti ho'vāca na te gādā bhaviṣyāmi'ti. 3. sā hā'vāca karṇau pṛṣṭyamāṇā sasāra. sā he' kṣām cakre katham nu mā śunī plaveta hantā'syai gādā'sāni'ti. tām ho'vāca mā mā pṛṣṭhā gādā te bhaviṣyāmi'ti. tathe'ti. tasyai ha gādā āsa. sā ha gādhenā'tisasāra. 4. tā hā' nvājagāma rasāyām antarvalenā'pīhitāh. tasyai hā'nvāgatāyai tathaiva sarpiḥ kṣīram āmīkṣām dadhīty etaḍ upanidadhuh. 5. sā ho'vāca nā'ham etaḍvad apriyā devānām. avidam yad vo' śītyām ta u vai devānām steyam kṛtvā carathai'tāsām vā aham gavām padavīr asmi. na mā lāpasiyadhve ne'ndrasya gā upaharisyadhva itī. 6. sā hā'nāciṣy upasasāha. jarāyā apām tad viveda. tad ha cakhāda. tām hā'ks upajagau tyam iva vai ghnatī Saramā jāru Khādati'ti.
 tad idam apy etaḥ rīvacanam tyam iva vai ghnatī Saramā jāru Khādati'ti jarāyā ha sā tac cakhāda. 7. sā ha punar āsasāra. tam ho'eus sarama'vido gā itī.

440.1 avidam itī ho'vācām rasāyām antarvalenā'pīhitāh. tā yathā'manyadhvam evam ājīhīrṣate'ti. 2. tām he'ndra uvāca'mūlīnīm are te sarame prajāḥ karomi yā no gā anuvīdyā itī.
 te hā'te vidarbheṣu mācalās sārameyā api ha śārdūlān mārāyanti. 3. te devā etaḥ abhiplavam samabharan. tenā'bhyavāpanta. tad abhiplavasyā'bhiplavatvam.

the Śāṭyāyanaka, as suggested by Sāyaṇa,⁶ supports the Jaiminiya. According to these two texts, Indra first deposes Suparṇa for the purpose. He proves disloyal. Then Indra sends Saramā who imposes a condition that he should give the cows' milk as food for her offspring. This was promised and she successfully scouted the enemy.

Though there is no express corroboration from other texts for Suparṇa's being involved in a mess in the search for the kine, the important fact that Saramā secured 'food' for her offspring—shall we say for mankind itself—has been borne out. According to RV 1-72-8, it may be said that this pact of Saramā secured the

Translation—

438.1 Now the Asuras called Pāpis were the cowherds of the gods. They made away with them. At the Rasā they penned them up and hid them in a cave. 2 The gods, exceedingly wroth, said: "O Eagle, search after these our cows." "Yes." He flew after them. 3 He came upon them hidden in a cave at the Rasā. Before him, when he had come, they placed this, viz. liquid butter, milk, clotted curds, sour curds. He was well sated with this. They said to him: "O Eagle, this shall be thy tribute, this food, do not betray us." 4 He flew away again. They (the gods) said to him: "O Eagle, hast thou found our cows?" "What news is there about the cows?" he said. 5 "This news," said Indra, compressing the eagle's crop. "I for one am the mouth (to declare that) thou hast stayed among the cows." He (the eagle) threw up a drop of sour curds or some clotted curds. That same became the camphor-plant which grows here in spring. 6 Indra thus cursed him (the eagle): "May thy sustenance be of bad origin, who, having found our cows, has not informed us." Thus his sustenance is the worst that is (found) in the rear of a village.

439.1 They said to Saramā: "O Saramā, do thou search after these our cows." "Yes." She set out for them. She came to the Rasā. 2 She said to her: "I shall swim thee (unless) thou wilt become fordable for me." "Swim me," she (the Rasā) said, "I shall not become fordable for thee." 3 She (Saramā) laying back her ears came forward in order to swim her. She (Rasā) considered: "How indeed should a bitch swim me? Come, I will be fordable for her." She (Rasā) said to her (Saramā): "Do not swim me, I will be fordable for thee." "Yes." There was a ford for her. By means of the ford, she crossed over. 4 She came upon them (the cows) hidden within a cave at the Rasā. Before her when she had come, they placed, just as (they had done) before, this, viz., liquid butter, milk, clotted curds, sour curds. 5 She said: "I am not so unfriendly to the gods. I have found what I may obtain of you. You, verily, have stolen from the gods. Truly of these cows I am the guide. You shall not make me prate, you shall not keep Indra's cows." (The text is a bit unintelligible here, however, the translator proceeds—). She...prevailed. The outer membrane of the waters—that she found. That she split open. One cried out against her: "As if she were to kill that one, Saramā splits open the outer-membrane." Even now there is this reproach: "As if she were to kill that one, Saramā splits open the outer-membrane." For she did split open that outer-membrane. 7 She came back again. They (the gods) asked her: "O Saramā, hast thou found the cows?"

440.1 "I have found them," she said, "hidden within a cave at the Rasā. Be pleased to take them just as you thought." 2 Indra said to her: "Food-eating, wench, I make thy offspring, O Saramā, who hast found our cows." And indeed among the Vidarbhas the mācalas, descendants of Saramā, kill even tigers. 3 These gods prepared this Abhiplava-ceremony. By means of it they sailed over. That is the etymology of the term Abhiplava."

6. Commenting on RV 1.62.3, Sāyaṇa says:

"atredamākhyanam. Saramā nāma devānūṇi. Paṇibhir goṣvapahṛtāsu tadgavesaṇāya tām Saramān Indrah prāhaisit. Yathā loke vyādho vanāntargatamrgānveṣaṇāya śvānam viśrjati tadvat. Sā ca Saramā evamavocāt "He, Indra, asmadyāya śīṣave tadgosambandhi kṣīrādyanam yadi prayacchasi tarhi gamisyāmi. Sa tathetyabravīt. Tathā ca Śāṭyāyanakam annādīnām to Saramā prajān karomi yā nō gā anvavindaḥ itī. Tato gatvā gavām sthānam ajāśit. Jñātvā cāsmāi nyavedayat. Tathā niveditāsu goṣu tamasuram hatvā tā gāḥ sa Indro' labhateti. Ayam artho'syām pratipādyate."

Oertel finds fault with Sāyaṇa for not giving the full story while introducing RV 10.108, where, it is clear that Sāyaṇa only expands the sentence quoted from the Sarvānukramāṇi. It may, however, be noted in passing that among about half a dozen contexts where Saramā and her adventure are stated in the RV, Sāyaṇa, almost without design, has given short or long milk-food to the whole of mankind (mānuṣī viṭ bhojate), RV 4·16·8- and Sāyaṇa thereon adds support for this view.⁷

Now it will be of interest to study the legend in detail.

I

RGVEDA SAMHITĀ

Following are the passages in the Rgveda which mention Saramā; an attempt will be made to construct a story of her exploits without departing from the original text.

1. Īndrasyā'ṅgirasām ceṣṭau vidāt Sarāmā tānayāya dhāśm / Bṛhaspátir bhinád ádrim vidád gáb sāmusrīyābhir vāvaśanta nárah // (RV 1·62·3)

Translation—

"By command of Indra and the Aṅgirasas, Saramā found sustenance for posterity. The Lord of the Gods (Bṛhaspati) split the rock⁸ and found the cattle; the heroes shouted merrily in company with the cows."

Sāyaṇa introduces the verse as follows—

Concerning this there is the following story (ākhyāna). There was the heavenly dog called Saramā. When the cows had been driven off by the Paṇis, Indra sent Saramā in search of these cows, even as in this world a hunter would send forth his dog in search of game. Saramā said, "O Indra, I will go on one condition, that you will give to our offspring the food belonging to these cows, viz. milk etc." He said: "Yes." And so the Śātyāyanaka says: "Food-eating I make thine offspring, O Saramā, who hast found our cows." Then going she learnt about the abode of the cows. And having learnt it, she told him. And having been informed about the cows, Indra, slaying the demon, regained these cows.⁹

2. Svādhyo divā á saptá yāhvīh rāyó dúro vyrtajñā ajānan / vidád gávyam Sarāmā dṛḷhām ūrvām yēnā nú kam mānuṣī¹⁰ bhójate viṭ // (RV 1·72·8)

introductions with slight inconsistencies. He could not have missed the difference in the outline of the legend really. One wonders if this adds support to the theory that Sāyaṇa alone did not write the Bhāṣya but caused many scholars to do so by parts, under his general editorship. Cf. Gune, Sāyaṇa's Commentary—its Composition. AŚ. Mookerjee 3.3.

Also my paper on the Rgvedic word Parvata, contributed to Prof. M. Hiriyanna Commemoration Volume (Pub. Kāvyaśāstra, Mysore), wherein I have argued in favour of the same conclusion.

7. sā no netā vājam ādarśi bhūrim. Sāyaṇa—no'smān bhūrim prabhūtam vājam annam netā prāpayitā sa tvam ā darśi. ādaram kṛtavān asi.

8. adrim attāram asuram (Sāyaṇa) meaning the demon Paṇi or Vala as he is sometimes thought.

9. The text is quoted above, footnote 6.

Translation—

Seven rivers, mighty and beneficent, from heaven (flow on earth), and (thereby) the knowers of Truth perceived the doors of wealth. Saramā found the kine and also plenty of food, by which, indeed, mankind enjoys (sustenance for ever).

It must be noted that this mantra is addressed to Agni. Though he is not directly connected with the recovery of the heavenly cows, the poet means to express that whatever good there has been, all that has happened by Agni's favour. The seven mighty rivers flow from heaven. They are flooded with water, which is showered on Earth by the Sun-god. And how is the Sun-god pleased? Through Agni, of course, who carries him the oblations with which the god is pleased. Even so, the release of the cattle. Having been pleased with the sacrifice, which is possible only through his favour, Indra sent Saramā in search of the cows, and in return she secured abundant food wherewith mankind is able to sustain.

Secondly, the stanza records two different ideas viz. the Vedic people as they progressed in their march finding seven huge rivers, and Saramā discovering the stolen cows. The one opened the very door of prosperity, by providing for agriculture etc., the other provided eternal food, namely cows' milk.

3. Vidád yádī Sarāmā ruṇām ādreh máhi páthaḥ pūrvyām sadhryak kaḥ /
 Ágram nayat supády ákṣarāṇām ácchā rávam prathamā jānatī gāt // (RV 3.31.6)

Translation—

When Saramā discovered the fated (entrance) to the mountain, then Indra made great and ample provision (for her young), as previously promised. Then the sure-footed one, already familiar with their lowing, led (them : Indra and Aṅgirasas) to the presence¹¹ of the imperishable kine.

This verse clearly implies the various stages of the story : cattle stolen and hidden in the mountainous stronghold, Saramā ordered to search and Indra's promise of food for her progeny, her success and the promise realised, Indra's final raid and recovery of cattle.

4. Apó yád ádrim puruhūta dārdah Ávīr bhuvat Sarāmā pūrvyām te / sá no netá vājam á darṣi bhūrim gotrá rujānn áṅgirobhir grānāḥ // (RV 4.16.8)

Translation—

When you rent the clouds apart, for the sake of water, O Indra, there appeared Saramā before you (bringing news of the cattle). Then, as the

10. Sāyaṇa—Yena nu yena tu gavyena mānuṣī viṭ manos sambandhinī prajā bhojate. Idānim bhuñkte. (Tad gavyam api parāmparayā'gnīr eva karoti).

11. Construe agram as accusative denoting place. Prof. H. D. Velankar.

Āngirasas extolled you, you, our leader, pierced through the mountains and, by providing us plenty of food, evinced great interest in us.

Note.—apo yad adriṃ puruhūta dardah—this must refer to a different incident, namely, the usual concern of Indra to send showers of rain to the Earth. Soon after this was performed, Saramā appeared with glad tidings of the discovery of the stolen cattle. So another adventure was ready for Indra, who, being greatly interested in the well-being of his followers, readily took up the task. The Āngirasas praised him all the while. Encouraged by their flattery, he vanquished the Paṇis, recovered the cattle and provided plenty of food for mankind, as promised to Saramā earlier.

5. Ānūnod ātra hāstayato ādriḥ ārcan yēna dāśa māśo nāvagvāḥ / ṛtām yatī Sarāmā gā avindat viśvāni satyā 'ṅgirāś cakāra // (RV 5.45.7)

Translation—

At this sacrifice the stone (set in motion) by the hands of the priests began to make noise, whereby the nava-gvas celebrated the ten-month worship, when Saramā, traversing the path of truth, discovered the cattle, and Āngiras rendered all (the rite) effective.

Note.—Sāyana, for the first time, introduces an alternative explanation of Saramā. She is the heavenly dog or Speech herself, uttering praise, and ṛtam is sacrifice or truth. (Ṛtam satyam yajñam vā yatī prāpnuvatī Sarāmā saraṇaśīlā stutirūpā vāk, āngirasām gavārtham indreṇa prahitā devaśunī vā gā avindat paṇibhir apahr̥tāḥ). Ṛtam means¹² among other things the heavenly path, the established path as well.

The hymn is addressed to the Viśve-devas, the palm, having been given to the Āngirasas (who are seven in number), in the liberation of the heavenly cows.

6. Viśve asyā vyūṣi māhināyāḥ sām yād góbhīr āngiraso nāvanta / ūtsa āsām paramé sadhāsthe ṛtāsyā pathā sarāmā vidad gāḥ // (RV 5.45.8).

Translation—

When all the Āngirasas, on the advent of this adorable Dawn, came in contact with the (discovered) cattle, then milk and the rest were offered in the august assembly, for Saramā had found the cows by the path of truth.

12. Grassmann in his Wörterbuch zum Rig-Veda has given as many as 23 meanings in which the word Rta has been used in RV. Articles and monographs have appeared in plenty on this subject in recent times. A comprehensive study of Rta has been made by Dr. H. Lefever in his "Vedic Idea of Sin" (Ph.D. thesis, Tübingen) London Mission Press, Nagarcoll, Travancore (1935).

Note.—Here, again, Sāyana takes Saramā as Speech or the heavenly dog, and ṛta as truth or water. (Ṛtasya satyasya pathā mārgeṇa Saramā vāk devaśunī vā gā nigūḍhā vidat alabhata. Yadvā āsām gavām parame sadhassthesahasthāne vrajasya nigūhanapradeśe utsa udakasya prasaravaṇo vartate, bilam ityārthaḥ. Tena ṛtasyodakasya pathā mārgeṇa Saramā gā vidat).

Again, the Viśve-devas are the devatā here. There was general jubilation when the cattle were recovered, Aṅgirasas led the celebration, all drank milk etc. and made merry.

The ṛṣi is Sadāprṇa of the Atri family, in this as well as in the previous quotation.

7.

RV 10.108

1. Kīm icchāntī Sarāmā prédām ānaṭ duré hy ádhvā jáguriḥ parācaśḥ / kāsméhitiḥ ká páritakmyāsīt kathām Rasāyā ataraḥ pâyāmsi //
2. Índrasya dūtír iṣitá carāmi mahá icchāntī Paṇayo nidhínvaḥ / atiskádo bhiyásā tán na ávat táthā Rasāyā ataram pâyāmsi //
3. Kidīññ Índras Sarame ká dṛśiká yásyedám dūtír ásaraḥ parākát / á ca gáecchān mītrám enā dadhāma áthā gávām gópatir no bhavāti //
4. Náhām tám veda dábhyaṃ dábhāt sáḥ yásyedám dūtír ásaram parākát / ná tám gūhanti sraváto gabhírāḥ hatá Índreṇa Paṇayaḥ śayadhve //
5. Imá gávāḥ Sarame yá áicchaḥ pári divó ántān subhage pátanti / kás ta éná áva srjād áyudhvi utásmákam áyudhá santi tigmá //
6. Asenyá vaḥ Paṇayo vácāmsi aniṣavyás tanvaḥ santu pāpīḥ / ádhrṣto va étavá astu pánthāḥ
Bṛhaspátir va ubhayá ná mṛlāt //
7. Ayám nidhíḥ Sarame ádribudhnaḥ góbhir áśvebhír vásubhir nyrṣṭaḥ / rákṣanti tám Paṇáyo yé sugopāḥ
réku padám álakam á jagantha //

8. Éhá gamann ṣṣayaḥ sómaśitāḥ ayāsyō āṅgīraso nāvagvāḥ / tā etām ūrvām ví bhajanta gónām āthaitād vácaḥ Paṇāyo vāmānīt //
9. Evā ca tvām Sarama ājagāntha prābādhitā sāhasā daīvyena / svāsāram tvā kṛṇavai mā púnar gāḥ āpa te gāvām subhage bhajāma //
10. Nāhām veda bhrātrtvām nó svasṛtvām Índro vidur āṅgīrasaś ca ghorāḥ / gókāmā me acchadayan yádāyam āpāta ita Paṇāyo váriyaḥ //
11. Dūrām ita Paṇāyo váriyaḥ ūd gāvo yantu minatīr ṛtēna /
Bṛhaspátir yā āvīndan nīgūlḥāḥ
Sómo grāvāṇa ṣṣayaś ca víprāḥ //

Translation—

1. With what intention has Saramā come to this place? Verily the way is long and 'losing itself in the distance.' What is the motive of thy coming to us? What sort of wandering was thine? And how didst thou cross the waters of the Rasā?

2. I come as the appointed messenger of Indra, desiring O Paṇis, your great hidden treasures; through fear of being crossed, the (water) helped us: thus I passed over the waters of the Rasā.

3. What is Indra like, O Saramā? How is the look of him as whose messenger you have come to this place from afar? Oh, let him come by all means, we will make friends with him, let him look after our cattle!

4. I cannot think he is a person to be subdued, he is one to subdue (others)—he, as whose messenger, I have come here from afar. The deep streams conceal him not. Slain by Indra, O Paṇis, you will lie prostrate.

5. These are the cows, O auspicious Saramā, which thou desirest, having traversed round and round the ends of heaven. Who will give them up to thee, without fight? And our weapons are sharp, indeed.

6. Your words, O Paṇis, are no substitute for armies, your sinful bodies may not be pierced by arrows, your track may yet be unassailable for an invasion, but, mind you, the Lord of the Gods (Bṛhaspati) will spare neither.

7. This treasure, O Saramā, with its cows, horses and riches, is quite secure in the mountain stronghold. Good sentinels are the Paṇis who guard it. Alas, in vain didst thou come to this far-off land!

8. Roused by the Soma, the Ṛṣis, Ayāśya, Aṅgirasas and the Navagvas will march against you here and this treasure of kine they will snatch and share; then, O Paṇis, you will eat these words of yours.

9. After all, O Saramā, thou hast come hither constrained by divine pressure. Return not, we shall make thee our sister and we shall set apart a share of cattle for thee, O good one.

10. Brotherhood or sisterhood, I know not; Indra knows and the fierce Aṅgirasas. Desirous of cattle they will besiege you as I get back to them; hence, O Paṇis, run away to a distant spot.

11. Make haste, O Paṇis, to a far-off place, let the kine step forth in due order—the kine which had been hidden and which Bṛhaspati (Indra), Soma, the Ṛṣis and the grinding stones have well earned.

From the above abstracts it can be seen that the recovery of the stolen cows was a great event in the annals of the Vedic peoples. Being referred to by name in no less than five maṇḍalas and by five seers of different families, Saramā has shown herself to be an important character. The Aṅgirasas, a company of seven brothers, have staged the whole drama. Indra is of course the hero. Bṛhaspati is once mentioned, but he is Indra only, being the chief of Gods (brhatām patiḥ). But it is indeed the concern of all the gods: hence the hymns to Agni the priest of the Sacrifice and to the Viśve-Devas. This suggests that for the common weal, the gods would put forth a united effort. Victory was theirs, as it ever came to be.

The author (or the seer) of the hymn of the tenth maṇḍala is anonymous, in the ordinary sense. Technically, the Paṇis and Saramā are seers (ṛṣi) of their own speeches and deities (devatā) of the speeches of the other party.¹⁴ (Paṇyuktau Saramā devī, taduktāu Paṇayas tathā).¹⁵ The dialogue (Samvāda) is excellently conceived, and composed in a masterful manner. The Paṇis are described as niggards, misers, traders or demons, henchmen of the Dasyu chief etc., etc. by the civilization-experts. This hymn belies such contemptible references. They are enemies of course, but they have behaved nobly, diplomatically and with the utmost courtesy for the messenger. Their utterances are marked by firmness and resolve; they won't surrender the treasure without a fight and their arms are strong enough. They have had the sense of humour to indulge in a light-hearted joke at their adversary, Indra. Especially that a female messenger led the mission, the questions—'How is Indra, how does he look like etc.'—provide amusement; they render the atmosphere more lively and perhaps easily convert the ambassador to thier own thinking. Lastly they tried to lure her with a share and argue speciously in support 'We know you have after all come on this mission by pressure of the gods, why bother to return and it is such long distance, stay with us as sister and enjoy a share of the cattle.' Thus three of the well-known expedients—sāma, dāna and bheda—were called in to play. The Paṇis behaved indeed magnanimously, for, were they demons and barbarians, what harm if they had resorted to the final expedient, danḍa, also? For the occasion at least, the enemy could have been put off the scent. But the Panis seemed to know and practice the laws of fair fight. Equally remarkable is the part played by Saramā. She displayed, from beginning to end, a sense of having realised her responsibility fully as an ambassador. Carrying a message was not the only task, she had to act also in consonance with and for the realisation of the message. The Panis, were taken by surprise when she, straight to their face, charged them with theft. The thieves could not evade or bluff. Her account that the waters of the Rasā chose to make it easy for her to ford across, lest she should swim, was sufficient to elevate her in their estimation. She spoke like a true champion when she said that her master is not a person to be cowed down, but he would cow down others. And no stream, however deep, can drown him. The idea that their abode was impregnable was disproved by Saramā herself hearing them in their own den. And how powerfully she rejects the offer of lucre! Finally her advice to them to depart surrendering the cows is not without tenderness. After all what is the gain in bloodshed and massacre! Thus we have the specimen of a political mission very ably discharged. And, again, whoever the author, he has succeeded in giving it a literary garb full of artistic merit.

Now to see such an excellent episode run its course in the stream of later literature.

ABSTRACT OF ṚGVEDA REFERENCES

The Reference	Maṇḍala	Ṛṣi	Devatā	Chandas	Remarks
(1) 1.62.3	Śatarcina	Nodhā-Gautamaḥ	Indra	Triṣṭubh	Indra and Angīras deputed Saramā; as a reward, she got food for the progeny. Brhaspati (Indra : brhatām patib) rent apart the mountain and obtained the cattle. All shouted with joy.
1. 1.74.4	..	Parāśaraḥ Śaktyab.	Agni	Triṣṭubh	They found the Seven Rivers flowing and thereby discovered the door of prosperity. Saramā found the stolen cows and mankind got its life's food. Different events evidently. But all by favour of Agni.

(8)	III.31.6	Viśvāmītra	Kuśika, Aīśvathī ¹³ or Viśvāmītra	Indra	Triṣṭubh	Saramā found out the culprits, Indra gave the promised food and much more; then she led, being first to recognise the cattle. These outlines are clearly implied.
-----	----------	------------	--	-------	----------	---

13. Investigating the alternative in naming the R̥ṣi of the hymn 3.31, some useful information was made out as follows :—

Sarvānukramanī says : Śāsat Kuśiko Viśvāmītra eva vā śruteḥ. And the Āṛṣānukramanī on the same : Kuśikam śāsat ityāhur Viśvāmītram yathāśruti/

This seems to suggest that tradition ascribes this hymn to Kuśika, son of Iśvatha and grandfather of Viśvāmītra. But actual mention in the Śruti is in favour of Viśvāmītra himself, the Śruti being AB 6.18.2, wherein the Sampāta hymns seen by Viśvāmītra have been enumerated, 'Śāsat' being one of them. Commenting on the passage, Śaṅḍagurukāya remarks.

Abhi taṣṭeva dībhayā manīṣām ityādi brāhmaṇaśrūtīdarsanād adhikṛta eva vā gāthapūtro Viśvāmītro vā / Sarvatra śruti-mūlatvāpyatra śrutiḥ iti pratyakṣaśrutiḥ iti vaktum / Eveti paunarvaenī (?) yako vā viśiṣṭatvādasyottamatra nirvṛttiḥ mā bhūḍ Tradition which was perhaps much older than the Altareya Brāhmaṇa assigned the revelation of the hymn to Kuśika an ancestor of Viśvāmītra. But the direct evidence as against heresay could not be discounted, the direct Śruti evidence being provided by the AB. And, moreover, he is a māṇḍalika (Seer of the whole mandalā). Thus the Anukramanī regard the AB also as Śruti, a term which must have come into vogue in its comprehensive sense already by the 4th century B.C. which is said to be the date of the Sarvānukramanī.

But compare the same hymn repeated in the Vājasaneyī Samhitā (33.59) and attributed to Kuśika only. Will this throw light on the relative age of VS and AB?

The Reference	Maṇḍala	R̥ṣi	Devatā	Chandas	Remarks
(4) IV.16.8	Vāmadeva	Vāmadeva	Indra	Triṣṭubh	This again refers to several incidents. Indra shattered the clouds for water. Saramā brought news of cattle. Angiras encouraged Indra by praise. Indragave them plenty and pierced the rocks (for the cows).
(5) V.45.7	Atri	Sadāpr̥ṇa Ātreya	Viśve- Devāh	Triṣṭubh	Having sent Saramā on the search probably, Angiras performed a sacrifice wishing success for her. And lo, she came with good news. Hence Angiras' part was creditable.
(6) V.45.8	Atri	Sadāpr̥ṇa Ātreya	Viśve- Devāh	Triṣṭubh	On a fine morning they celebrated the victory. The Angirasas called an assembly to felicitate Saramā who found the cows. All drank with joy.

(7) X.108.1-11	Kṣaudra-sūktas and Mahā-sūktas	Paṇis and Saramā	Saramā and the Paṇis	Tristubh	How Saramā executed her mission is brought out in this dramatic dialogue. With grit and endur- ance she travelled so far, crossed a deep river and discovered the cows. Then charged the robbers with theft. They cut jokes at her and tried to win her over by offering a share of booty. But with uprightness and sagacity, she did not succumb. On the other hand, she threatened them ef- fectively and warned them to run away to a distant land after surrendering the cows.
----------------	-----------------------------------	---------------------	-------------------------	----------	--

II

SĀMĪHITĀS OTHER THAN THE RĠVEDA

1. The Vājasaneyi Sāmhītā repeats RV III.31.6 Vidadyadi Saramā etc. (VS 33.59), the repetition does not bear any relevancy to the context.¹⁶

2. The Kāthaka¹⁷ repeats the same mantra i.e. RV 3.31.6 with a background which is of doubtful cogency. Gods and demons vied with each other in sacrifice. Whatever gods did demons also did and became more prosperous. The gods became inferior and much degraded. Then they saw the 'Āgrāyaṇa' rite and overtook their rivals. In this rite they first employed the mantra Vidadyadi Saramā (RV 3.31.6) as 'puro-ruc.' In the redemption of the heavenly cows, Saramā went forth first and the task was accomplished, perhaps this 'going ahead' was sufficient to justify the employment of the R̥gvedic verse in the 'Go-ahead' rite (āgrāyaṇa). And to boot there is the word agram in the mantra!

3. The Maitrāyaṇī Sāmhītā also repeats¹⁸ the same mantra i.e. RV 3.31.6 (Vidadyadi Saramā etc.). Here also the setting is the "Āgrāyaṇa," the mantra is again employed as 'puro-ruc.' Having performed the Āgrāyaṇa, the gods went up to heaven and ousted the demons. The explanation of 'puro-ruc' is rather interesting. Says the text after quoting RV 3.31.6. Iti puro rucam kuryāt, rujati haiva, atho vāg vai Saramā, vācam evaiṣām vṛṅkte.

4. The Atharva-veda Sāmhītā has two verses referring to Saramā (AV 9.4.16 and 20.77.8). Of these the latter reference is a repetition of RV 4.16.8. The former is as follows:

Té kúṣṭhikāḥ Sarāmāyai kūrmébhyo adadhuḥ śaphān / ūbadhyamāsyā kiṭébhyah śva (śa) vartébhyo adhārayan //

Translation—

'Those dew-claws (were) Saramā's, they assigned the hoofs to the tortoises, the content of his bowels they maintained for the worms, the Śavartas'.—Whitney (HOS).

This hymn of the AV is to accompany the gift of a bull and is counted among the pauṣṭika mantras. It does not contribute anything for our understanding of the Saramā problem. She must however have been looked upon as the deity of the dogs.

16. Mahidhara comments upon this, giving both interpretations i.e. Saramā as heavenly dog and Saramā as Speech.

17. Devās ca vā asurās ca samāvadeva yajña'kurvata yadeva devā akurvata tad asurā akurvata te'surā bhūyāmsaś śreyāṁsaś āsan kanīyāmsaś pāpyāmsaś ānujāvaratārā iva devās te devā etam āgrāyaṇam apaśyams tam agṛhṇata tenāgram paryāyan yad agram paryāyams tad āgrāyaṇasyāgrāyaṇatvam ya ānujāvaras syāt // Vidadyadi...gāt // ityetayā purorucāgrāyaṇam gṛhitam bhrātṛyaṁ eva vṛktvāgram paryeti // (KS Sthānaka 27. anuvāka 9).

18. With one difference: vidadyadi for vidadyadi (MS 4.6.4).

The RV verse 4.16.8 is AV 20.77.8. In fact the first eight verses of the RV hymn are repeated as AV 20.77, though the former has 21 stanzas in all. Indra is the deity praised throughout, the viniyoga being in connection with the pr̥sthya and other sacrifices. The reference to Saramā, therefore, has the same value as its original counterpart.¹⁹

It may be said that the other Saṁhitā texts contain no reference to Saramā. That she was an entity to reckon with in the Vedic fold seems more than established, though already speculation was afoot whether she was Indra's dog or whether she represented that most covetable attribute of a human being, viz. Speech.

III

BRĀHMAṆAS

(A) 1. Taittiriya Brāhmaṇa : (2.5.8.10.)²⁰—

Vidād²¹ yāti Sarāmā rugnām ādrah / Māhi pāthah pūrvyām sadhriyakkah / Āgram nayat supādyākṣarāṇām /
Ācchā rāvam prathamā jānatī gāt /²²

Vidād²³ gavyam Sarāmā dṛḍham ūrvām / Yénā nūkam mānuṣī bhōjate viṭ / ā yé víśvā svapatyāni cakrūb / kṛvānāso amṛtatvāya gātum /²⁴

Saramā, goddess in the guise of a dog, being deputed by Indra, once, to find food on earth, was proceeding to the mortal world from the Meru mountain. There she saw the people starving for want of food. Then she created plenty of water, which is the preliminary aid for food and which flowed through all fields. Sure footed, she led forth water and then in front she knowing the lowing sound of the imperishable ones (cows) proceeded towards them.

19. In the words of Whitney (Atharvaveda HOS 7.exli) Book 20 is a pure mass of excerpts from the RV, it stands in no conceivable relation to the rest of the AV, and when and why it was added thereto is a matter for conjecture.

20. A word-index to all the extant Brāhmaṇas has been provided by the Vaidika-padānu-krama-kośa (in two vols.) VVRI, Lahore. See for the present reference Vol. II Brāhmaṇas, part II, p. 1047. [VVRI in now in HOSIARPUR East Punjab].

21. Mādhyāya-bhāṣya—Saramā kācit śuñi śvamūrtidhārini devatā bhūmāvannasampādanārtham āyati Indreṇa preṣitā adrer yati meroh sakāśād bhūmim gacchanti rugnam annābhāvena kṣudhā grastam janam vidad alabhata / Tato mahi pāthah mahajalam kaḥ akarot / Kīdṛṣam ? Pūrvyam pūrvam utpannam annasya kāraṇam sahāncetiti sadhriyak sarvakṣetrasaṁcārityarthah suṣṭhu padyate gacchatīti supadī sā śuñi agram nayat tajjalam purato nītavati / Tatra purodeśa akṣarāṇām kṣaro vināśo himsā tadayogyānām gavām rāvam śabdām jānatī ācchā tadābhīmukhyena prathamā mukhyā sati gāt jagāma jalotpādanenānnam sampādyā gorasam sampādayitum gatavātityarthah //

22. Reads differently from RV. RV 3.31.6 di for ti, dhryak for dhriyak.

23. Saramā śuñi gavyam goyūtham vidad alabhata / kīdṛṣam ? dṛḍham kadācidapyānapāy-inam ūrvam atiprabhūtam / mānuṣī viṭ viśvamanuṣyārūpā prajā yena goyūthena bhojate kṣīrādīkam bhuñkte / Nukam ityetaḍavyayam sarvathetyasminnarthe vartate / Amṛtatvāya svargarūpāya karmaphalāya gātum mārgam kṛvānāḥ kurvānā ye yajamānā viśvā sarvāni svapatyāni karmānyā cakrūb sarvataḥ kṛtavantaḥ / Tathāvidhayajamānarūpā prajā yena gavyena bhuñkte tam goyūtham alabhateti pūrvatrānvayah //

24. Reads differently from RV 1.72.8^a dṛḍham, 1.72.8^b 1.72.9^a tasthuh, 1.72.9^b.

Saramā found the herd of kine which was strong and huge, by the help of which the whole mankind is provided with milk etc. And all (the sacrificers) performed their duty and prepared the way for attaining heaven.

These Brāhmaṇa portions are concerned with mantras for what are described as upahomas.²⁵ The commentary is by Sāyaṇa as stated. But the interpretation is so different from that given in the RV for the same passage. This strengthens the view that commentaries attributed to the great name of Sāyaṇa do not appear to be by a single hand. Under his able sponsorship a number of scholars must have independently i.e. without co-ordination worked out different sections at one time.

No further light is thrown on the original Saramā story except the fact that the tradition that Saramā by her timely service to Indra was able to secure food for mankind has been corroborated. That she found the (stolen) cows is also established. The relevancy of the contents of these mantras to the occasion prescribed is altogether a different problem.

2. The Āpastamba Śrauta Sūtra (12.15.6) simply repeats the reading of the TB, only the first half corresponding to RV 3.31.6 and has nothing to add.

3. The version of the Jaiminiya Brāhmaṇa and the Śātyāyanaka, which is available only in quotations²⁶ in other works, has been recorded above. (Supra fn. 5). There are a few minor variations from the accepted version of the story e.g. the Paṇis are introduced as the cowherds of the gods; they made away with the cattle in their charge.

4. Taittiriya Āraṇyaka²⁷—

Sahasravṛd iyam bhūmiḥ / param vyoma sahasravṛt / Aśvinā Bhujyū Nāsatyā / viśvasya jagataspati / jāyā bhūmiḥ patir vyoma / mithunam tā aturyathāḥ / putro brhaspati rudraḥ / Saramā iti strī pumam / śukram vāmantaḥ rajatam vāmanyat / viṣurūpe ahanī dyauriva sthah //

Commentary—Saramā vedīḥ, saraḥ saraṇam anuṣṭhānapravṛttiḥ sā ca miyate paricchidyate atreti Saramā sā ca taylor duhitā / 'Iti' evam strīpumam ekā strī dvau pumāmsau iti apatyatrayam sampannam.

Here we have a third equation of Saramā.²⁸ She is the sacred altar (vedī) and, if her holy origin were to be stated, she is the daughter of Heaven and Earth (Dyāvāprthivī). Brhaspati and Rudra—a peculiar combination—are also their sons and hence Saramā is their sister. It is a well-known hypothesis that the

25. Caturtha upahomārthā mantrā bahava tritāḥ /
Prapāṭhake pañcameśmīna taccheṣa upavarṇyate // p. 225, Mysore Edition.

26. Dr. T. R. Cintāmani reports discovery of a Śātyāyanaka Ms. which is only fragmentary. (JORM 5, pp. 296-298. 1931). He, however, has not stated whether the name Śātyāyana has anywhere been indicated in the Ms.

27. Rajendra Lal Mitra's Edition, with Sāyaṇa's Commentary, Bibliotheca Indica, Calcutta, 1871, Baptist Mission Press (pp. 73-74). I prapāṭhaka, 10th anuvāka.

28. 1st, the heavenly dog (RV), 2nd the human speech (YV).

Taittiriya marks a stage when Vedic life was dominated by the sacrificial cult and we should note as such the several allegorical or mythical equations of the live personalities of the Rgveda. One thing can be marked that the canine nature of Saramā has come to recede from the thought of the people.

(B) Later Vedic references—

Saramā does not seem to have contributed to Upaniṣadic thought. Her mundane appeal however has kept up in rather an amusing way, as reflected in the Pāraskara Gṛhya sūtra.²⁹ After the medhājanana ceremony certain spells are pronounced to guard the confinement chamber :

Yadi kumāra upadravej jālena praechādyottariyeṇa vā pitāṅka ādhāya japati—kūrkuraḥ sukūrkuraḥ kūrkuro bālabandhanaḥ / Cececechunaka sṛja namaste astu Sīsaro lapetāpahvara / Tat satyam yat te devā varam adaduḥ sa tvam kumāram eva vāvṛñthāḥ / Cececechunaka sṛja namaste astu Sīsaro lapetāpahvara / Tat satyam yat te Saramā mātā Sīsaraḥ pitā Śyāmaśabalau bhrātarau / Cececechunaka sṛja namaste astu Sīsaro lapetāpahvareti.

If, after birth, the child takes ill, the father takes the child on his lap, wraps it up warmly and recites the Dog-spell if it may be so termed. It is an invocation to the dog not to bother the child. For when the gods offered him a boon, it seems he chose the children for himself, that is, he will possess them, causing illness and perhaps death. The idea corresponds to what is generally described as bālagraha (bālabandhana), which is referred to in the Mahābhārata.

Thus in the spell the father pleads with the creature to leave the child : ' Verily your mother is (the celebrated) Saramā, your father Sīsara and, Śyāma and Śabala (the famous hounds of Yama) are your brothers. Therefore, doggie, let go, salutation to thee, Sīsara may speak, depart '. This is a sentiment and an appeal to the unknown spirit to get away from the child etc.—an appeal which we unconsciously say while appeasing the crying child.

A similar reference is found in the Ekāgni-kāṇḍa (2.16) which is also in the form of a spell to drive away the Dog-Spirit (śva-graha) i.e. to ward off whooping cough etc. which generally attack the children. Here the pedigree is differently given, fresh names are introduced, Alaba, Rji, Adhorāma, Ulumbala, Subīrṇa, etc. Śyāma and Śabala are there of course, Saramā the mother but Lohita the father. But there is an interesting allusion to Saramā's spying the cattle while the boon is granted to the dog to pester children. ' True it is, Indra told thee to spy and bring the cows. Thou spied them and came back. He asked thee : ' Hast thou spied? ' Thou saidst : ' Spied. ' (Indra then said) " Ask for a boon. " (Thou saidst, " I select kumāra " etc.³⁰

29. PGS I, 16.24. cf. Mbh. Āraṇyaka-parva (manuṣya-grahas), cf. Keith, RPV p.241. Also Hopkins, CHI, p.231. Hopkins thinks that the dog in the RV is the companion and ally of man, the protector and probably the inmate of his house. He also takes a strong exception to Brunnhofer's theory that in the eyes of the Vedic Aryans, the dog was a despicable beast. Amj Ph. V pp.154-55.

30. Nārāyaṇa Aiyangar : Essays on Indo-Aryan Mythology, Part I, p.180 f. (1898). This author identifies Saramā with the star Rohiṇī or Aldebaran.

IV

NIRUKTA

Yāska explains (Nir. 11.24-25).³¹

Saramā Saraṇāt / Tasyā eṣā bhavati / 24.

Kim icchantī Saramā etc. RV 10.108.1. is quoted :

Kim icchantī Saramedam prānaḥ / dūre hyadhvā / jagurīr jaṅgamyateḥ / parāñcanair acitaḥ / kā te'smāsv arthahitir āsit / kim paritakanam / paritakmyā rātriḥ, parita enāni takma / takmetyuṣṣanāma, takata iti sataḥ / Katham Rasāyā ataraḥ payāmsi / Rasā nadi, rasateḥ śabdakarmanah / katham rasāni tānyudakāniti vā /

Devaśunindreṇa prahitā Paṇibhūr asuraiḥ samūda ityākhyānam //

The heavenly dog, Saramā, being deputed on an errand by Indra, had this conversation with the demons called Paṇis. Saramā got the name by her quick movement (saraṇāt). Thus Yāska is prepared to credit the story of Saramā as if the event did take place: the demons stole the divine cows, Indra ordered Saramā to search, she found them with the Paṇis and had conversation with them, Indra recovered the cattle. The sacrificial equation of Saramā with Vāk or Vēdi was perhaps not recognised by him, though, as an etymologist, such explanations should usually catch his fancy.

But Durgācārya, his commentator, would not leave it at that. He is interested in the student knowing the other aspect of things as well. He writes—

Saramā devaśunīyāitihāsikapakṣeṇa / Mādhyamikā vāk Nairuktapakṣeṇa / Sā kasmāt / Saraṇāt gamanāt / Durgācārya writes in the most felicitous style and that will be sufficient excuse to quote him in extenso—

Devapaṇayaḥ kila devagavīr apajahruḥ / tataḥ kilendrastadanveṣaṇāya tadālayam Saramām prāhiṇot / Te ca devapaṇayastām dṛṣṭvā papracchur anayarcā kim icchantīti / Idam asmannivāsasthānam Saramā kim icchantī kim asmattaḥ prārthayantī prānaḥ prāptavati kadācid apyanāgatapūrveti / api ca dūre hyadhvā / mahadetad adhvānam na yadṛchayā śakyam āgantum / Ya eva jagurīr syāt bhṛṣam gantā sa eva śakta āgantum / Parācūḥ parāñcanairacitaḥ parāñmukhair añcanair gamanair acito gataḥ viprakṛṣṭo devanivāsāt / yato brūmah / He Sarama kāsmehitīh kā tava asmāsvarthahitīh arthasyādhānam / ko'smatto'rthas tava prāptavyo'bhīpreta āsit yenāyam atimahānadhvā vyavasita āgantum / api ca kā paritakmyāsīt / kim paritakanam / api nāma sukhā rātrir anantarā tavāsīt / paritakmyā rātriḥ / takmetyuṣṣanāma takater gatyarthasya / sarvato hi tadgatam bhavati / tadenām ubhayataḥ parigrhya vartata iti paritakmyā rātriḥ / api ca / katham Rasāyā ataraḥ payāmsi / Rasā nāma nadi adhyardhayojanavistārā /
tasyāḥ payāmsyatidustarāṇi katham ataraḥ katham tīrnavatyasi / athavā /

31. Nirukta Ed. R. G. Bhadkamkar with Durga's commentary, Vol. 2, pp. 1067-1070 (1942).
Bombay Sanskrit Series, No. LXXXV.

katham rasāni tānyudakāni / api nāma svādūni / api śrāntāyāstavāntarā vāsāḥ keśvāsanniti /

Devaśunindreṇa prahītā iti nidānaprakhyāpanam mantrārthābhivvyaktaye /
samūde samvādam kṛtavatityarthah / Ityākhyānavidaḥ evam manyante /

Vākpakṣe tu cirakālīna vṛṣṭivuparame kadācid abhinavameghasamplave sahasaiiva stanayitnum upaśrutyā kuta iyam mādhyamikā vāk cireṇāgateti vismitas tām asūyannīva bravīti kimicchanti Saramā iti / Idam asmacchrotram eiram anāgamya Saramā mādhyamikā vāk kim icchanti prānaṭ prāptavati / api ca / dūre hi adhvā / cirakālaśruteyam asmābhiḥ / jaguriḥ bhr̥śam yo gantā syāt sa ciravicchinnam etad varṣavartma punar āgacchet santanuyāt parācaih parānmukhaiḥ etad acintyam / Ciranaṣṭam ityarthah / api ca / kāsmeḥitih / kim asmāsva-rthābhīdhānam āsit pūrvam tava he Sarame yenāgamaḥ / kim vā na jātam yenāpunarāgamaḥ / api ca / ciraprosītāyās tava kim paritakanam āsit / Antarikṣanadyā api mahatyā Rasāyāḥ katham atarah payāmsi / katham atibahūnyudakāni saṁkṣobhyātmānam pratilabdhatyasya iti vā /

“Vāg vai Saramā”

(MS 4.6.4)

iti hi vijñāyate //

It is evident that the commentator is at pains to explain the so-called Nairuktapakṣa. The samanvaya is hard to understand. Writing in an age when Vedic knowledge was handed down by tradition, both in text and content, Durgācārya has indeed presented a traditional interpretation. For, much of the Vedic cult was pursuit of the intellect rather than of common practice. Significant also is the fact that the Vāk-identity of Saramā is sponsored by the Yajus-saṁhitās (KS, MS, VS). This is definitely expressed by Mahīdhara³² commentator of Vājasaneyi Saṁhitā while explaining 33.59 which is a repetition of RV 3.31.6 as above indicated. Having commented on the mantra first as interpreted by the sacrifice he says: “Evam adhiyajñam mantro vyākhyātaḥ / Bahvṛcānām tu samvādasūktam idam.” And a fresh derivation of the name Saramā is also suggested: “Saha ramante devā viprā vā yasyām sā Saramā vāk”. On the whole it should be repeated that the superimposition of the Vāk-identity fails to go home.
Coming after Durga and Sāyana, Mahīdhara has faithfully rendered the Yajustradition.

V

BRHADDEVATĀ

(a) Saramā is included among the deities and deified objects belonging to Indra's sphere.³³

32. His commentary is known as Veda-dīpa. Ed. A. Weber with the text of the VS (1852) in three parts.

33. Rākā Vāk Saramāptyās ca Bhṛgavo'ghnyā Sarasvatī
Yamyurvaśi Sinvālī Pathyā Svastir Uśāḥ kuhūḥ //
Connected with ... Tasyaitasyāśraye'ditih (St.124) BD 1.123.

(b) Saramā is, then, one of the names of Vāc in her middle sphere. It is said that Vāc has three forms terrestrial, middle and celestial:

Pārthivī Madhyamā Divyā Vāgapi trividhā tu yā

* * *

Esaiva Durgā bhūtvārcam kṛtvā syāt sūktabhāginī
Tannāmāni Yamindrāṇi Saramā Romaśorvaśi //³⁴

(c) Saramā is mentioned as one of the Brahnavādinīs (female seers) among others like Ghoshā, Godhā, Apālā, etc.

Ghoshā Godhā Viśvavārā Apālopaniṣannīṣat /
Brahmajāyā Juhūr nāma Agastyasya svasāditih /
Indrāṇi cendramātā ca Saramā Romaśorvaśi /
Lopāmudrā ca nadyas ca Yamī nārī ca Śāśvatī /
Śrīr Lākṣā Sārparājñi Vāk Śraddhā Medhā ca Dakṣiṇā /
Rātri Sūryā ca Sāvitrī Brahnavādinīya īritāḥ //³⁵

It is difficult to believe that if Saramā, the Brahnavādinī and Saramā the messenger of Indra, were the same, the latter could have brought upon herself the ill repute stated in the following passage of the same Bṛhaddevatā.

(d) BD 8.24-36.

24. Asurāḥ Paṇayo nāma Rasāpāranivāsināḥ
Gāste'pajahrur Indrasya nyagūhaṁś ca prayatnataḥ /
25. Bṛhaspatis tathāpaśyat dr̥ṣṭvendrāya śaśamsa ca
Prāhiṇot taṭra dūtye'tha Saramām Pākaśāsanāḥ /
26. Kīmityatrāyujābhis tām papraccehuḥ Paṇayo'surāḥ kutaḥ kasyāsi kalyāṇi kim vā kāryam ihāsti te /
27. Athābravit tām Saramā dūtyaīndri vicarāmyaham yuṣmān vrajam cānviṣyanti gās caivendrasya prechataḥ /
28. Vīditvendrasya dūtim tām asurāḥ pāpacetasāḥ
Ūcra mā Sarame gās tvam ihāsmākam svasā bhava /
29. Vibhajāmo gavām bhāgam māhitā ha tataḥ punaḥ
Sūktasyāsyāntayā carcā yugmābhis tveva sarvaśaḥ /
30. Sābravinnāham icchāmi svasṛtvam vā dhanāni vā
Pibeyam tu payas tāsām gavām yās tā nigūhatha /
31. Asurās tām tathetyuktvā tadājahrur payas tataḥ
Sā svabhāvācca laulyācca pītvā tat paya āsuram /

34. BD 2.77. The above enumeration is supported by the Nighaṇṭu (ch. V) with slight differences here and there. Macdonell draws attention to the fact that Durgā, not being a Vedic goddess, is not to be found in the Naighaṇṭuka and therefore holds that the line is an interpolation. The line, in his opinion, interrupts the sense of the passage, besides giving half a śloka too much for the varga. "It must however have been an early interpolation as it occurs in Mss. of both groups." See BD (Tr. and notes), p.53 under St. 77.

35. BD 2.82-84.

32. Param samvananam hr̥dyam balapuṣṭikaram tataḥ
Śatayojanavistārām atarat tām Rasām punaḥ /
33. Yasyāḥ pāre pare teṣām puram āsit sudurjayam
Papracchendras ca Saramām kaccid gā dṛṣṭavatyasi /
34. Sā neti pratyuvācendram prabhāvādāsurasya tu
Tām jaghāna padā kruddhaḥ udgirantī payas tataḥ /
35. Jagāma sā bhayodvignā punar eva Paṇīn prati Padānusāripaddhatyā rathena harivāhanaḥ /
36. Gatvā jaghāna ca Paṇīn gās ca tāḥ punar āharat /³⁶

Translation—

24. "There were demons called Paṇis who dwelt on the farther bank of the Rasā. These carried off the cows of Indra and hid them away carefully."
25. Br̥haspati saw (it was) thus, and having seen it he reported it to Indra. Then the Chastiser of Pāka (Indra) dispatched Saramā thither on a message.
26. In the (hymn) "what?" (Kim 10.108) the Paṇi demons interrogated her with the uneven stanzas, (saying) "Whence (do you come)? To whom do you belong, fair one? Or what is your business here?"
27. Then Saramā addressed them: "I wander about as the messenger of Indra, seeking you and (your) stall and the kine of Indra who is asking for them.
28. On learning that she was the messenger of Indra, the wicked demons said: "Do not depart, Saramā, be our sister here.
29. Let us divide our share of the cows, be not unfriendly (ahitā) henceforth again."
- And with the last stanza of this hymn (10.108.11), as well as the even ones throughout,
30. She said, "I do not desire either sisterhood (with you) or (your) wealth, but I should like to drink the milk of those cows which you are hiding there."
31. The demons saying "Yes" to her, then brought her the milk. She having from natural taste and greed, drunk the demons' milk—
32. excellent, charming, delightful, stimulating strength—then again crossed the Rasā which extended a hundred leagues,

36. Some of the lines irresistibly remind one of the Rāmāyaṇa style. It may be phantasy to jump on identities or postulate the lend-and-borrow theory: but pray, the phrase 'Śatayojanavistārām' by its sense and setting suggests Hanuman's flight over the 100-league-ocean. (Rāmāyaṇa: Sundarakāṇḍa—Canto 1). Oertel draws attention (JAOS 19, 2nd half, p. 99 fn.) to the fact that H. Jacobi compares the finding of Sītā by Hanumat to Saramā's search for the cows (Das Rāmāyaṇa, 1893, p.133).

37. In the notes Macdonell draws attention to Oldenberg's remarks in ZDMG 1898, p. 414 f. The remarks happen to be from the pen of Böhtlingk. Just a slip of the pen, repeated in the note on stanza 30.

33. On the farther bank of which was their impregnable stronghold. And Indra asked Saramā, "You have seen the cows, I hope?"
34. But she under the influence of the demons replied "no" to Indra. He, enraged, struck her with his foot. She then, vomiting the milk,
35. went trembling with fear, back again to the Paṇis. The Lord of bay steeds (Indra) on his car, by the track which followed her steps,
36. went and smote the Paṇis and brought back the cows.

It must be conceded at the outset that this narrative, short and sweet, is complete in itself. It leaves no doubt in the mind of the listener as the threads are quite clear. The Paṇis stole Indra's cows. Brhaspati made the 'first information report' to Indra whereupon the latter set Saramā on the investigation. She was quite successful, but, alas, poor thing, she allowed herself to be enticed by the enemy. But let us see: In stanza 30, she clearly rejects the offer of a bribe from the demons and refuses to recognise any sisterhood with them. On second thoughts however, she asked for the milk of those cows which they were hiding there. The demons thought that she had come round or, at least, that she became vulnerable. They said 'yes' and brought the milk. But it was āsuram payaḥ, apparently cultured with witchcraft, had its effect surely upon the victim and mark we, therefore, the description of the milk in the next stanza (32. param, samvananam, hṛdyam, balapuṣṭikaram—excellent, charming, delightful, stimulating strength) which attributes warrant us to think that the milk was enchanted and certainly was not the milk of Indra's cows. But how did Saramā, who handled the case so far with such deftness, suddenly grow so stupid as to spread a trap for herself? She perhaps thought that, by claiming the milk of those cows i.e. Indra's cows and by getting it, she would, in a way, get assured of the surrender of the cows: a kind of earnest-money as it were. But she miserably failed and was outwitted.³⁸ So it is just possible to exonerate her from the charge of accepting a bribe, for, only in the elation of her success, she tripped and got caught in her own net. It is, at any rate, discreet to observe that the R̥gvedic hymn 10.108 closes with the final speech of Saramā which administers a warning to the enemies. The sequel is left to fancy. The fact of Saramā's treachery is not borne out by corroborative evidence, as her faithful service has been, for instance, by the JB and the Śātyāyanaka. RV 3.31.6^a—agram nayat supadi—must set all suspicion against her at rest. She led forth, fleet-footed that she was, which is a high compliment for her rôle in the whole episode, pronounced by no less a Vedic Authority than Viśvāmitra.

38. The situation reminds one of Hanumān's reflections on the duties and responsibilities of a messenger, e.g. Ghātayanti hi karyāni dūtāḥ paṇḍita-māninaḥ. Rāmāyaṇa, (Sundara 2.38). Kārye karmaṇi nirvṛtte yo bahūnyapi sādhyat / pūrvakāryāvirodhena sa kāryam kartum arhati // (Ibid. 41.5).

VI

SARVĀNUKARAMAṆI

The Sarvānukramaṇi of Kātyāyana says—

Kimicchanti Paṇibhīr asurair nirūlhā gā anveṣṭum Saramām devaśunīm Indreṇa prahitām ayugbhīḥ Paṇayo mitrīyantaḥ procuḥ sā tām yugmāntyābhīr anicchanti pratyācaṣṭe /³⁹

Ṣaḍguruśiṣya's commentary thereon—

Atharṣi-devatā-jñānāya kathām kathayati / kathā caivam / Purā khalu Bṛhaspater Indrapurohitasya gāvo Balāsurabhrūkuṭitaṭaiḥ Paṇināmakair asurair hṛtā Balapuram prāpya suguptasthāne sthāpitā āsan / Atha Bṛhaspati-preritenendreṇa naṣṭānveṣaṇam kṛtvā Saramā nāma devaśunī prahitā babhūva / Sā ca Balapurasaṁīpe Rasākhyām mahānadīm uttīrya Balapuram prāpya sarvam vicintya gupte sthāne tā gā dadarśeti / Tatra Paṇināmabhir asurair bṛhaspatigṛhādāhṛtya nirūlhā Balapure guptāḥ sthāpitā gā anveṣṭum indreṇa prahitām Saramām devaśunīm śvajātyām devatām mṛgayādiśvindrasya sādhanabhūtām asya sūktasyāyugbhīr rgbhīḥ pañcabhir ādyātrīyādibhīḥ Paṇayo mitrīyantaḥ Devaśunyā saha mitratvam ātmana icchantāḥ (mitrāt kyaci itvam śatari jasi ca rūpam) prapayapūrvakam uktavantaḥ / Sā ca devaśunī tām yugmāntyābhīr yugmabhir dvitīyācaturthyādibhir ekādaśyā ceti ṣaḍbhīḥ pratyācaṣṭe /

Paṇyuktau Saramā devī tadukttau Paṇayastathā //⁴⁰

The brief reference to the story in the Sarvānukramaṇi text has nothing to add to our information. But one word is significant that Saramā, unwilling (anicchanti) to accept their offer of friendship, repudiated them. This stresses the fact that the reflection brought on her character according to the Bṛhaddevatā is to be discounted. By the time that Ṣaḍguruśiṣya writes, it can be noticed that even the broad outlines have been tampered with. The Aṅgīrasas are completely out of the picture. The cows belong to Bṛhaspati specifically and he is designated as Indra's priest (Indra-purohita). Paṇis are slaves who are at the beck and call of the demon Bala, hence the stolen cows were hidden in Bala's city. Saramā is the dog of heaven but goddess belonging to the canine species, helpful to Indra in the sport of hunting etc. (śvajātyām devatām, mṛgayādiśv Indrasya sādhanabhūtām).

It seems incongruous however that, if the demon Bala was the overlord, if the cows were stolen by the Paṇis evidently at the behest of their chieftain, and, further, if the booty was hidden in Bala's capital, Indra's messenger Saramā should have talks with the servants, the Paṇis, and, that the Paṇis could speak so authoritatively and even offer terms on the spot. Bala's superior strength and frequent conflict with Indra as suggested in other parts of the R̥gveda are perhaps responsible for his advent into the format of this story. The clear lines of the original, owing to addition and expansion, have already become hazy in the imagination of posterity and inconsistency in detail here and there should not matter for a credulous folk !

39. p. 42 Macdonell's edition.

40. Vedārtha-dīpikā of Ṣaḍguruśiṣya accompanying the Sarvānukramaṇi, Macdonell's edition, p.160.

VII

SĀYAṆA

Sāyaṇa in his Vedārtha-prakāśa (commentary on RV-Saṁhitā) :⁴¹

(A) Following are the contexts where Saramā's name is mentioned as well as the incident of the recovery of the stolen cows.

(1) 1.62.3 The text of Sāyaṇa's prefatory remarks on this mantra with its argument as well, is quoted above (see supra fn. 9).

(2) 1.72.8 In the course of the comment, Sāyaṇa says—

‘Tvatsādhyena yāgena prīta Indro gavām anveṣaṇāya Saramām nāma devasunīm preṣitavān / Sā ca Saramā gavām sthānam avagatyendrasya nyavedayat / Indras ca tān āngiraso gāh prāpayat / Ata etat sarvam tvam eva kṛtavān’

The R̥k is in praise of Agni.

(3) 3.31.6 The story background of this verse is supplied by Sāyaṇa while explaining the previous verse which also alludes to the event : It runs as follows :

Purā kilāṅgirasām gāvah Paṇināmakair asurair apahr̥tya nigūḍhe kasmimścit parvate sthāpitāh / Te cāṅgirasas tatprāptyartham Indram tuṣṭuvuh / Stutaś ca sa Indro gavānveṣaṇāya Devaśunīm prāhiṇot / Sā ca gavām gaveṣaṇa-parā satī tat sthānam alabhata / Tayā vijñāpita Indras tā gāh ānīyā'ngirobhyah prādād ityaitihāsikī kathā /

The affair of the heavenly cows is directly or indirectly suggested in the preceding and succeeding verses viz. 3.31.5 and 7. As certain problems arise out of a perusal of these three verses it is better to consider them together. Prof. H. D. Velankar translates them as follows :⁴²

3.31.5. The wise (Āngirasa) dug out (a path reaching) upto (the cows) dwelling in the strong (fortress of Vala), the seven priests urged themselves forward with a bold (prācā) spirit. They discovered all the paths of R̥ta. Knowing these, Indra entered (the cave of Vala) with respect (for the Āngirasa).

41. Max Müller's 2nd Edn. 1892 Oxford, and the edition of the Vaidika Saṁśodhana Māṇḍala (Poona) the last volume of which was published last year (1946). [Vol. V - Indices - since published].

42. Journal of the University of Bombay, Vol. 3 (1934-35) Part VI, p. 8 f. Prof. Velankar has translated and annotated the Hymns to Indra by the Viśvāmitras (1935), Vāmadevas (1938), Atris (1939), Gṛtsamadas (1940), Bhāradvājas (1942), Vasiṣṭhas (1944), of the VIII Māṇḍala (1945). He has made "full use of all the existing material on R̥gvedic studies. Special mention however, must be made of the two great German scholars, Oldenberg and Geldner."

3.31.6. When Saramā found out the fissure in the rocky cave (of Vala), she at the same time found out (sadhryak kaḥ) the great and ancient food (or protection i.e. the cows) thereby. The light-footed Saramā led (herself or Indra and Aṅgirasas) into the presence (agram) of the never-perishing (cows). As she well recognised it, she was the first to go in the direction of their bellowing.

3.31.7. The great poet (i.e. the leader of the Aṅgirasas) went (to the mountain) seeking its friendship, and the mountain did sweeten its contents for the pious man (i.e. kept the cows ready for delivery). The brave god, fighting along with his youthful friends (Maruts) did win (the cows), and then immediately did Aṅgiras begin to sing.⁴³

It is clear that the fifth stanza above refers to the recovery of the cows after attacking the enemy's stronghold. This feat was chiefly the work of the Seven Priests who are generally identified with the Aṅgirasas. Indra acknowledges their service with respect. Saramā is nowhere in the picture! The next verse (6) also relates the adventure of redeeming the heavenly cows. But Saramā figures prominently.⁴⁴ She led herself or, Indra and the Aṅgirasas, to the presence of the imperishable kine. The seventh stanza contemplates quite another picture: the leader of the Aṅgirasas went to the mountain seeking friendship, the mountain did sweeten its contents (asūdayat⁴⁵ garbham) for the pious man (i.e. kept the cows ready for delivery). If so, no fight at all, the object is gained. But the text continues to say the brave god, fighting along with his youthful friends (the Maruts) did win (the cows), and then immediately did Aṅgiras begin to sing. This confuses a bit: if the mountain, in deference to the pious man was willing to surrender the cows, there should be no work for the brave god and the friends. In all the exploits of Indra, clearing a cloud or rending a rock asunder is a feature; without this feat, did the fight take place at all, is the question.

It seems to me that the seventh stanza is a sequel to the 6th, the sequence is logical: Saramā led the way, Indra, always desiring (or working for) friends, followed. And lo,—perhaps Saramā's threat to the Paṇis (RV 10.108) had effect—

43. The text of the above verses is as follows:

5. Viṣṇu satīr abhi dhīrā atṛndan prācāhinvan mānasā saptā viprāḥ /
Viśvām avindan pathyām rtāya prajānān it tā nāmasā viveṣa //
6. Vidād yādī Sarāmā rugnām ādreh māhi pāthah pūrvyām sadhryak kaḥ /
Agram nayat supādy āksarāṇām ācchā rāvam prathamā jānati gāt //
7. Agacchad u vipratamas sakhīyān āsūdayat sukṛte garbham ādriḥ / Sasāna māryo yūvabhīr makhasyān āthābhavad aṅgīrāḥ sadyo ārcan //

44. "It is evident that the poet is anxious to give the credit of the discovery of the cows to Saramā." H. D. Velankar, Notes on p. 9 JUB. 1933, Part VI.

44a. from svad=sweeten? cf. VG 556, but see also VG 554 a. sūd=make pleasant: causative sūd-āya.

the mountain had kept its contents (the cows) ready to be handed over. Meanwhile the Maruts (the leader with his young group) joined the chief, and Aṅgiras immediately offered compliments to their Lord. The translation may be restated as follows :⁴⁵

And verily, the Most Wise went after, he who always desires friends for himself, the mountain surrendered its contents to him of great deeds. The chief of the Maruts (maryah) with his youthful group joined in order to felicitate him. And Aṅgiras promptly set himself to praise.

If it be granted, then, that the sixth and the seventh stanzas are composite, could we reconsider the explanation of the 5th stanza? As already stated, the part played by the Aṅgirasas is stressed there, that, in fact, they did the whole thing, dug an (underground) path to the mountain cave etc. and that Indra had only to go and bring the cows. Saramā is not wanted at all. Let us now consider the other references in RV itself. RV I 62.3 definitely says "Indrasyāṅgirasām ceṣṭau vidat Saramā tanayāya dhāsim"—Saramā obtained food for progeny on the occasion of her deputation by the desire of Indra and Aṅgirasas.⁴⁶ RV 5.45.7 emphasises the same when, it says "Ṛtam yatī Saramā gā avindad viśvāni saty-āṅgirās cakāra"—Saramā by adopting the path of Truth discovered the cows, and Aṅgiras made good the promise to the entire world. Both Saramā and the Aṅgirasas are extolled here. And finally RV 10.108 must convince all about Saramā's mission to the Paṇis as Indra's Messenger (Indrasya dūtīḥ). Thus Saramā's rôle in the whole affair is remarkable. Having regard to this background we shall read 3.31.5 again :

Viṣṭiḥ satīr abhī dhīrā atṛndan
prācāhinvan mānasā saptā viprāḥ /
Viśvām avindan pathyām ṛtasya prajānānn it tā nāmasā viveṣa //

45. With the following notes—

(a) Vipratamaḥ—atiśayena medhāvi—Sāyaṇa.

(b) Sakhīyan (aṅgīrobbhis saha) sakhīvamātmāna icchan. Taken to qualify vipratamaḥ, not adrih. Because Indra always worked for the good of the gods, desirous to endear himself to them. Every account of this story says that either Aṅgiras or Brhaspati urges upon Indra to take action. He took, only to oblige them. Thus sakhīyan more appropriately refers to Indra's desire for friendship at home with Aṅgiras and others rather than with the mountain.

(c) It is not an unreasonable happening if, as a result of Saramā's warning, the Paṇis, evasive as they were, prone to harass rather than fight a pitched battle, left the cows in the mountain cave and ran away. The impression is that the Paṇis and other tribesmen were a constant menace to the gods' smooth living. So why should they run the risk of being once for all destroyed by facing Indra on the battlefield?

(d) cf. Monier-Williams: Sanskrit-English Dictionary under marya.

(e) makhasyan=makhitum icchan. According to Dhātupāṭha, (132-159) makha makhī nakha nakhi etc. are all gatyarthas i.e. meaning to go. cf. Monier-Williams under makha, the root means to worship, makha adj. Ved. "active, lively, sprightly, cheerful, free (said of the Maruts etc.)." makhasyan may therefore mean desiring to worship, hence, felicitate.

46. Sāyaṇa. Indrasya Aṅgirasām ṛṣṭān ca lṣṭau prarape satī.

It may be translated thus :

The strong-minded Seven Priests troubled themselves (atṛndan)⁴⁷ much with regard to (abhi) (the cows) pent up (satih) in the stronghold (vīlau) : they propitiated with devout (prācā) praise for Indra, and they found the eternal (viśvām) (Saramā) who was following the Path of Truth. Knowing all these (acts), (Indra) came in full deference (to the priests).¹

To conclude, one is impressed, that RV 3.31.5, 6 and 7 may be said to constitute a connected narrative of Indra's recovery of the stolen cows. The Seven Priests, noticing the fact that the cattle had been lifted, set themselves busy regarding their recovery. They praised and propitiated Indra. Then they secured the co-operation of Saramā. Indra heard their prayer and came upon the scene. Indra and the Seven Priests deputed Saramā to reconnoitre. She succeeded and led Indra and the Aṅgirasas to the presence of the cows. The Maruts also rushed to the spot, evidently to support their chief. It was a pleasant surprise however to see that the cows were ready to be led back to heaven, for, apparently, the Paṇis had fled. The Maruts offered their respectful felicitations and the Aṅgirasas showered compliments on the glorious Indra.

(4) RV 4.16.8 seems to allude to more than one event as already remarked, hence Sāyana's allusion to the Saramā episode is but casual. Commenting on the 2nd line of the verse, he says : (āvir bhuvat Sarāmā pūrvyām te)

Saramā devaṣuṇi pūrvyam purā te tubhyam Paṇibhir apahr̥tam godhanam āvir bhuvat prakāśayānūṣa /

We must also mark that the Aṅgirasas, all the while, praised Indra (aṅgirobhir gr̥hāṇaḥ).

(5-6) RV 5.45.7, 8

Sāyana has alluded to the story very briefly here and there in the whole hymn. What he has said specifically under verses seven and eight has been quoted and considered above. Commenting on the first stanza of the hymn he says—"atra āṅgirasām pañibhir apahr̥tya girer adhaḥ sthāpitānām gavām Indreṇa vimokaḥ pratipādyate." The cows are here represented as belonging to Āṅgirasas themselves. Secondly, as already stated, the complex of construing Saramā as something other than Saramā, a heavenly being, has been introduced for the first time. Here she is either herself or the embodiment of Speech.

47. utṛdir himsānādarayoh says the Dhātupāṭha (1539) tṛd VII P.—to trouble, kill, destroy etc., also to disregard. Sāyana says upēksām akurvan = neglected, which interpretation is to do discredit to the Seven Priests who are described as dhīrāḥ. After the cattle were lifted, the Seven Priests took great trouble with regard to their search and recovery, is the simple idea. What did they do? First, as anybody would do in distress, they poured forth prayer to God i.e. Indra—prācā manasā ahinvan—Sāyana—prakarṣeṇa Indram āncatiti prāk / tenendraviṣayena manasā / manyata iti manah stotram / Tena stotreṇāhinvan avardhayan Indram tuṣṭam akurvan (hivi, divi, dhīvi, jivi prānanārthāḥ—Dhātupāṭha 630 ff). Secondly, viśvām ṛtasya pathyām avindan (i.e. viśvasambandhinīm viśvāṣām prajānām indrānugrahena annam sampādāyitrīm ata eva mātṛnirviṣeṣām Ṛtasya satyasya pathyām pathi bhavām Saramām devīm avindan alabhanta ityartho'nuśūyayā vicāryatām sahdayaiḥ tatrābhavadbhīḥ. Saramāyā devyā mātṛnirviṣeṣatā nigamenaivābhīpretā iti me manisā / tad atrāvadhāryatām—RV 5.45.6 āpa yā mātā ṛutā vrajām gōh /) they found the goddess (Saramā), the eternal or universal, she having found support or sustenance for the whole universe. She being one of the deities of heaven indeed followed the path of Rta, established order. All the gods belonged to a hegemony which had certain Laws which would be adhered to by the members in the interests of the general weal. Here was the good Saramā, light-footed, whose services, the Aṅgirasas proposed to be utilised. Prajānan it tā / tā tānyaṅgirasām karmāṇi prajānan it prakarṣeṇa jānan Indrah—Sāyana. Indra having recognised all these preliminary efforts on the part of the Seven Priests, came forward (entered upon the scene : ā viveśa) to do his part of the duty.

(7) RV 10.108

Introducing this fine hymn, which records a talk (samvāda) between Saramā (Indra's messenger) on one part and the Pañis on the other, Sāyaṇa says—

Aindrapiurohitasya Bṛhaspater goṣu Valanāmno'surasya bhaṭaiḥ Pañināmakair asurair apahr̥tya guhāyām nihitāsu satīṣu Bṛhaspatipreritenendreṇa gavām anveṣaṇāya Saramā nāma devaśunī preṣitā / Sā ca mahatīm nadīm uttīrya Vala-puram prāpya guptasthāne nītās tā gā dadarśa. Atha tasmīnn antare Paṇaya idam vṛttāntam avagacchanta enām mitrikartum samvādam akurvan.

According to this the stolen cattle belonged to Bṛhaspati. As the text itself is silent as to whom definitely the cows belonged, to Indra, to Āṅgirasas or to Bṛhaspati or to the gods as a community, it will not be unreasonable to assume that the gods as a community possessed one stall and that Āṅgirasas and Bṛhaspati, the Maruts and other followers of Indra were concerned with its safety. Most references, however, point to the Āṅgirasas owning it. Bṛhaspati in the R̥gvedic context is yet Indra (Bṛhatām patiḥ). The Maruts are always stated as Indra's allies. So the ownership question may be solved in favour of the Āṅgirasas.

(B) In certain contexts where the recovery of the stolen cows is the topic though Saramā's name is not mentioned, Sāyaṇa says :—

(1) °RV 1.6.5 Asti kiñcid upākhyānam / Pañibhir devalokāt gāvo'pahr̥tā andhakāre nikṣiptāḥ / Tās cendro marudbhiḥ sahājayaditi / Etaccānu-kramaṇikāyām sūcitam—Pañibhir asurair nigūḷhā gā anveṣṭum Saramām devaśunīm Indreṇa prahitām ayugbhiḥ Paṇayo mitriyantah procuḥ / man-trāntare ca dr̥ṣṭāntalayā sūcitam—niruddhā āpaḥ Paṇineva gāvah (RV 1.32.11) iti / Tadetaḍ upākhyānam abhipretyocyate—

(2) RV 1.32.11 Pañināmako'suro gā apahr̥tya bile sthāpayitvā bilā-dvāram ācchādya yathā niruddhavāmsstathetyarthaḥ /

Here perhaps on account of the brevity of the introduction, Sāyaṇa has not paid attention to accurate details. In the first citation above, he simply says : The demons called Pañis stole the cows and imprisoned them in darkness. Indra won them back with the help of the Maruts. Neither Saramā nor the Āṅgirasas are mentioned.

(3) RV 2.24.6 Introducing this stanza, Sāyaṇa says :—

Gosamūhe Pañibhir apahr̥te sati Pañinām sthānam Saramākhyayā devaśunyā jñātvā Brahmanaspatinā sṛṣṭā Āṅgirasah tat sthānam prāpya gosamūham Paṇibhir nirmitā māyāś ca dr̥ṣṭvā asuranivāsasthānam svahastodbhūtenāgninā dagdhvā pratyāgacchan / Tadetat dv̥ṛcenocyate /

When the Paṇis stole the cows, the Aṅgirasas traced them with the help of Saramā and reduced them to ashes with fire produced by their own hands. For once Indra is not concerned in the whole adventure! All the same Indra is the devatā of the verse and the hymn (first 12).

VIII

NĪTIMAÑJARĪ

Nitimañjarī (15th cent. A.D.)—

Dyā Dviveda, author of the Nītimañjarī with his own commentary, postulates a few ethical maxims on the basis of the Saramā legend.

1. Tattvavid api samsāre mūḍho bhavati lobhataḥ
Tattvajñā Saramāyācad Indram annam gavām grahe /

Though knowing the Truth, a person out of greed in this earthly life, loses all sense of values; Saramā, who knew the Truth, begged food from Indra on the occasion of redeeming the kine.

'Saramā's knowledge of the Absolute is declared in "Godhā, Ghoṣā" etc. (BD 2.82-84). Even she, caught in this worldly illusion, asked Indra food for her progeny. Any ignorant man will exert to protect the cows, but Saramā, though full of divine knowledge, lost all sense by avarice. There is a story relating to it.⁴⁸

The story is borrowed from Sāyaṇa verbatim. Then RV 1.62.3 is quoted, as also BD 8.24-36 ' which described the event connected with RV 10.108.⁴⁹

2. Uttame cādhamē kārye dūtaḥ syād uttamo'dhamah
Devādūto babbhūvāgnir dūtiha Saramā Paṇin //⁵⁰

According as a task is big or small, the messenger also may be big or small. Messenger to the Gods became Angi, but messenger to the Paṇis, Saramā.

The messengership of Saramā is illustrated in RV 3.31.6. The mantra and Sāyaṇa's bhāṣya thereon are again repeated, and reference is made to other connected stanzas as well: viz. 5.45.7 and 8.⁵¹

3. Vakraiḥ krūratarair lubdhair na kuryāt pr̥tisevanam /
Asuraiḥ Paṇibhir naicchan maitrīm hi Saramā purā //⁵²

48. "asyā brahmajāatvam Godhā Ghoṣeti pratipāditam / Sāpi māyayā bādhitā satī Indram svatanayārtham annam yayāce / anyo'jño'pi gās trātum udyamam karoti / Sā tattvajñāpi lobhamūḍhā'bhūd ityuktam / Tatretihāsah"—NM p. 40 (Nitimañjarī Ed. S. J. Joshi, Benares, 1933).

49. "Kim icchantiti sūkte (RV 10.108) proktaḥ Saramāsambandhītihāso Bṛhaddevatāyām evam varṇito'sti" Ibid. p. 41.

50. NM p. 143 f.

51. Ibid. p. 146.

52. Ibid. p. 336.

One should not contract friendship with the crooked, cruel and greedy, for, in times of yore, Saramā did not like friendship with the demons called Paṇis.

Then the story as described by Sāyaṇa and two verses from the hymn (RV 10.108.9-10) are repeated.

4. Yasya syāt saṅgataṃ sadbhīr bhavet so'lpō'pi bhāgyavān /
Devaśunīndrasaṅgatyā jītvābhūt subhagā Paṇīn///⁵³

Though small, a person who acquires contact with the good will rise in fortune. The 'divine bitch' by her association with Indra conquered the Paṇis and became great.

The victory of Saramā is reflected in RV 10.108.11, which is quoted in support of the moral And so much from Sāyaṇa's commentary as usual.

IX

RĀMĀYAṆA

There is no reference to Saramā in the Rāmāyaṇa. One episode is however found in the Uttarakāṇḍa⁵⁴ of how Rāma meted out justice in favour of a Sārameya (descendant of Saramā) against a dvija, who beat the former without reason. The two cantos that relate the story elaborately are shown in printed editions as interpolations. And as the entire Uttarakāṇḍa also is not credited with authenticity there is no need for considering the reference here.

X

MAHĀBHĀRATA

(1) An account similar to the one cited from the Rāmāyaṇa is given in the Pauṣyaparva. It is as follows :

Janamejayaḥ Pārikṣitaḥ saha bhrātrbhiḥ Kurukṣetre, dīrghasatram upāste / Tasya bhrātaras trayas Śrutaseṇa, Ugraseṇa
Bhīmasena iti // 1

Teṣu tat satraṃ upāsīneṣu tatra śvā'bhyāgacchat Sārameyaḥ / Sa Janamejayasya bhrātrbhir abhīhato rorūyamāṇo mātussamīpam upāgacchat // 2

Tam mātā rorūyamāṇam uvāca / kim rodiṣi / kenāsyabhihata iti // 3

Sa evam ukto mātaram pratyuvāca / Janamejayasya bhrātr-bhir abhīhato'smīti // 4

53. * Ibid., p. 338.

54. Two cantos after canto 59 of the Uttara-kāṇḍa of the Rāmāyaṇa of Vālmīki. Nirṇya-sagar Edition with the commentary Tilaka.

Tam mātā pratyuvāca / vyaktam tvayā tatrāparāddham yenāsyabhihata iti // 5

Sa tām punar uvāca / nāparādhyāmi kiñcit / nāvekṣe havīṃṣi / nāvaliha iti // 6

Tacchrutvā tasya mātā Saramā putraśokārtā tat satram upāgacchat yatra sa Janamejaya saha bhrātr̥bhir Dipasatram upāste // 7

Sa tayā kruddhayā tatroktā / ayam me putro na kiñcid aparādhyati / kimartham abhihata iti /

Yasmāccāyam abhihato'napakāri tasmād adṛṣtam tvām bhayam āgaṃṣyatīti // 8

Sa Janamejaya evam ukto devaśunyā Saramayā dr̥ḥham sambhrānto viṣaṇṇaś cāsīt // 9⁶⁶

Janamejaya, son of Parikṣit, once in Kurukṣetra entered upon a long sacrifice along with his brothers. Three were his brothers by name Śrutasena, Ugrasena and Bhīmasena. 1

As they were engaged in the sacrifice, there came a dog, who was son of Saramā. Beaten by Janamejaya's brothers, he crying aloud, ran to the mother. 2

The mother told him who was weeping—why do you weep? By whom are you beaten? 3

Thus said, he replied to his mother—I have been beaten by the brothers of Janamejaya. 4

The mother said to him again—Evidently you have been at fault, therefore you are beaten. 5

He replied her again—No, I have not wronged even a bit. I do not pry into the oblations nor do I lick them. 6

Hearing that, his mother Saramā very much moved by grief for her son went to that sacrifice where Janamejaya and his brothers were performing what is called Dīpa-satra ('Sacrifice for Light'). 7

The angry Saramā burst forth there—This my son has wronged you in no way. Why was he beaten? Since he was beaten though innocent, an unknown calamity shall befall you. 8

Thus told by the heavenly dog Saramā, Janamejaya was very much frightened and was filled with remorse. 9

(2) Saramā is mentioned as one of several goddesses (devyāḥ) who were members of Brahma's Court.

Kālakā Surabhir devī Saramā cātha Gautamī
Ādityā Vasavo Rudrā Marutaś Cāśvināvapi

* * * *

Suparṇanāgapāśavaḥ Pitāmahaṁ upāsate // ⁵⁶

* * * *

(3) Saramā is represented as a manuṣya-graha. Regarded as a Goddess (devī), she is one of those who attacks the womb of pregnant women.

Saramā nāma yā mātā śunām devī janādhipa /
Sāpi garbhān samādatte mānuṣīṇām sadaiva hi // ⁵⁷

Thus in the Mahābhārata, the incident of the Sārameya reminds us of the fact that Saramā, who successfully vindicated her innocent progeny, gives an impression that by then she was regarded herself as one of the canine species. She was, however, in sufficient authority and strength to curse the Lord of the land. The second reference that she had a place in Brahma's Court reminds us of her Vedic importance. According to the third, she, still a goddess though, descended to the level of being the cause of mankind's misery. This is in striking contrast with the Vedic idea that she was responsible in securing eternal food for mankind.

XI

VARĀHA PURĀNA

The Varāha Purāṇa relates the 'Saramopākhyāna'. In the course of a conversation between Varāha (the Boar incarnation of God Viṣṇu) and Dharapī (Mother Earth), the former narrates the story :

Once as a result of Duvāsas's curse Indra was ousted from Heaven by Durjaya, son of Supratika. With all other gods and followers, he settled on earth towards the east of Vārāṇasī (Benares). In the meanwhile, Vidyut and Suvidyut, two demons, practised severe penance and took possession of the overlordship of the world after Durjaya's death, and raised a mighty army to overcome the gods. The gods meditated on how they could regain their suzerainty over heaven. Then Brhaspati, their priest, advised them to perform a cow sacrifice first and then all other sacrifices.⁵⁸ Then the gods gathered all cattle for sacrifice, but left them for grazing in charge of Saramā. While she was doing her duty at Dharādharma, the demons went there, saw the cows and sought advice of their preceptor, Śukra, who promptly ordered them to seize the cows. They did so but Saramā, who was 56. Mbh. Sabhāparva Ed. F. Edgerton. 11.29.31, (Critical Edition, BORI), 1944.

57. Mbh. Āraṇyakaparva, Ed. V. S. Sukthankar, 219.33 (Critical Edition, BORI), 1942.

58. Abrahit tatra devānām gurur āgirasō munīḥ /
Gomedhena yajadhvam vai prathamam tadānantaram // 10
Yaśjavyam kratubhis sarvair eṣā sthitir athāmārāḥ /
Upadeśo mayā dattah kriyatām śighra eṣa vai // 11

Varāha Purāṇa Ch. XVI, vv. 10-11. Bibliotheca Indica 1893.

attentively guarding the paths, saw them leading away the cows.⁵⁹ The demons also saw her, who knew well their ways. They wanted to square up by conciliation and, offering the milk of the cows for her to drink, requested her not to report the theft of the cows to the Lord of the Gods. So they left her in the woods and walked away with the booty. Saramā returned to the gods, trembling and paid due homage to Indra. Meanwhile the Maruts had been secretly deputed by Indra for protection of the heavenly dog. Now, they also came and stood before Indra. Indra asked Saramā 'What happened to the cows?' 'I know not,' she replied. Maruts were asked, and they described all that Saramā did. Then Indra rose and struck her with her foot. Milk began to flow from her mouth and Saramā made way back to where the cows were. Indra followed with his army,⁶⁰ killed the demons and recovered the cows. Then he performed many sacrifices, fought the demon hosts again and re-established himself as Lord of Heaven.

The impression, by the time of this Purāṇa, is certainly that Saramā was a dog gifted of course with heavenly powers. But her being enticed by a cup of milk was rather earthly. The only support for this version is the Brhaddevatā account, whereas the evidence for her exemplary conduct appears to be overwhelming.

XII

RECENT OPINIONS

Professor Kühn was the first, we are told, 'to analyse the meaning and character of Saramā, arriving at the conclusion that Saramā meant storm,⁶¹ and that the Sanskrit word was identical with the Teutonic storm and with the Greek horme. Disagreeing with this theory, Max Müller has tried to prove that Saramā is Dawn, rather one of the many names of Dawn. The myth is a reproduction of the old

59. Hṛtāsu tāsu Saramā mārgānveṣanatatparā
 Apaśyat sā Dīteḥ putrāir nītā gāvo dharādhare
 Daityair api śunī dr̥ṣṭā dr̥ṣṭamārgā viśeṣataḥ / 17
 Dr̥ṣṭvā te tām ca sāmaṇaiva sāmapūrvam idam vacaḥ
 Āsām gavām tu dūgdhvaivam kṣīram tvam Sarama śubhe
 Pibasvaivam iti proktvā tasyai tad dadur añjasā / 18
 Datvā tu kṣīrapānam tu tasyai te daityanāyakāḥ
 Mā bhadre devarājāya gāstvimā vinivedaya // 19
 Evam uktvā tato daityā munucus tām śunīna vane (Ibid st. 17-19).

60. Tasyāś ca maruto devā devendregā nirūpītāḥ //
 Gūḍham gacchata raksārtham devaśunī mahābalāḥ //

Tām devarājāḥ papraccha gāvāḥ kim Sarama bhavan /
 Evam uktā tu Saramā na jñānīti cābravit // 24

Kathayāmāsur avyagrāḥ karṇa tat Saramākṛtam //

Tasyendrapādaghātena kṣīram vaktrāt prasusruve /
 Sravatā tena payasā sā śunī yatra gābhavat /
 Jagāma tatra devendraḥ sahasainyas tadā dhare / 20 (Ibid).

61. Explained by Aufrecht as follows: "When the clouds (Pañis) have withheld the water (the cows) from the thirsty earth for a long time, the sky-god (Indra) being stirred up by the prayers and sacrifices of men, sends as his fore-runner the Storm (Saramā), then at last he personally cleaves the hidden clouds with lightning and thunderbolt" ZDMG 1859, p. 497.

story of the break of day. The bright cows, the rays of the sun or the rain clouds—for both go by the same name—have been stolen by the powers of darkness, by the Night and her manifold progeny. Gods and men are anxious for their return. But where are they to be found? They are hidden in a dark and strong stable, or scattered along the ends of the sky, and the robbers will not restore them. At last in the farthest distance the first signs of the Dawn appear, she peers about, and runs with lightning quickness, it may be, like a hound after a scent, across the darkness of the sky. She is looking for something, and, following the right path, she has found it. She has heard the lowing of the cows, and she returns to her starting place with more intense splendour. After her return there rises Indra, the god of light, ready to do battle in right earnest against the gloomy powers, to break open the strong stable in which the bright cows were kept, and to bring light, and strength, and life back to his pious worshippers. This is the simple myth of Saramā, composed originally of a few fragments of ancient speech, such as: 'the Paṇis stole the cows', i.e. the light of day is gone, 'Saramā looks for the cows', i.e. the Dawn is spreading, 'Indra has burst the dark stable' i.e. the sun has arisen."⁶²

Coming to the field of comparative mythology, Max Müller recognises "in Helen, the sister of the Dioskuroi, the Vedic Saramā, their names being phonetically identical, not only in every consonant and vowel but even in their accent."⁶³

Bloomfield identifies the 'four-eyed bitch' mentioned in AV 5.20.7 with Saramā:

"Thou art the eye of Kaśyapa and the eye of the four-eyed bitch. Like the sun, moving in the bright day, make thou the Piśāca evident to me."⁶⁴

Macdonell⁶⁵ and Keith⁶⁶ have preferred to stick to the evidence of the Vedic texts scrupulously. There is nothing in the RV directly to show that Saramā was there conceived as a dog. Saramā's part in the recovery of the cows has been duly appreciated. Sometimes the cows are spoken of in the Veda as confined by the demon Vala without reference to the Paṇis and driven out by Indra. Sometimes also, it must be pointed out, the event is alluded to without reference to Saramā, for, as we observe elsewhere, the cattle lifting was a very usual way of provoking or harassing the enemy. Agni, Bṛhaspati and the Aṅgīrasas are also actively interested in the affair. "The meaning of the myth can hardly be doubtful," Keith 62. Max Müller, Lectures on the Science of Language, Second Series, 1864, pp. 469-470.

63. Ibid. p. 471.

64. "Kaśyāpasya cākṣur asi śūnyāś ca caturakṣyāḥ /
Vidhrē sūryam iva śarpantam mā piśācam tirāskaraḥ //

Commenting on this, Bloomfield says, "the four-eyed bitch is Saramā, the mother of the two four-eyed dogs of Yama, Śyāma and Śabala which I have explained as the Sun and the Moon" p. 404, SBE XLII and also cf. JASO XV, p. 163 ff. Sāyana supports the identity: catvāri akṣīni yasyāḥ sām caturakṣī tādṛśyāḥ śūnyāḥ devānām sambandhinīyāḥ saramākhyaḥ / cākṣur asi-tyanusaṅgaḥ / Whitney has no opinion to give in the matter, though he thinks the commentator was at pains to explain the four-eyes, as the latter says: etenāpradhrīyatvam uktam 'thus is indicated her invincibility'.

65. Vedic Mythology (Encyclopædia of Indo-Aryan Research) p. 161.

66. Religion and Philosophy of the Veda (Harvard Oriental Series 31 and 32) 1925, p. 192.

remarks, "when it is noted how often Indra is brought into prominence as the maker of the dawn and the finder of the Sun. The cows must be, not rain-clouds, as sometimes in the myth of Vṛtra, but the morning beams of light or perhaps the red clouds of dawn, there is little difference between the two conceptions."⁶⁷ Speaking in general terms about the appearance of the dog, or the eagle or the one-footed goat in the Veda, Keith postulates: "In all these cases there is clearly either theriomorphism or the natural association of animals with the gods on the model of the relation of man and the animals."⁶⁸ Oldenberg⁶⁹ treats the legend, we are told, (10.108) as an aetiological myth to explain men's ownership of cows. Hillebrandt⁷⁰ finds the dawn in Saramā and the sun and the moon in the Sārameyas. Appreciation of RV 10.108 in its poetic aspect has been made by several scholars, but a fine study of it is recorded by Aufrecht. The whole legend is studied briefly in its historical aspect, comparing the RV version with that of the Varāhapurāṇa. The hymn is translated and annotated. He concludes: "The old poem is remarkable for its poetical value apart from its mythological contents. The insolence and later the cowardice of the Paṇis in opposition to the earnestness and loyalty of Saramā are seen in such sharp and striking contrast that one dares to mention this poem as the most beautiful ornament of the R̥gveda."⁷¹

SUMMARY

Based on the RV Saṁhitā, the Saramā story may be restated as follows: Enemies used to harass the gods now and again by stealing their cows. On one occasion, it happened that the Paṇis stole them and hid them in their stronghold. The seven priests, who are commonly known as Aṅgirasas, first noticed the loss and apprised Indra. They praised him, and, rallying the folk around, propitiated him with sacrifice, so that the great god may recover the cows. Indra naturally was pleased and, by the suggestion of the Aṅgirasas, deputed Saramā to search for the lost property and bring news. Saramā took this opportunity to claim, as reward, food for her progeny in the shape, perhaps, of the milk of the divine cows. It was granted. Then she went on her journey which was rather arduous but was fortunate enough to discover the cows after crossing the mighty river Rasā. Finding that the Paṇis had imprisoned the kine in the mountain stronghold, she took them by surprise and charged them with theft. The Paṇis made sure of her credentials, that she came as messenger from Indra. Being in such vantage and endowed with strength and strategem, the Paṇis held out against Saramā's threats. But realising her mettle, tried to persuade her not to return at all, by offering a share of the treasure and a treatment as if she were their sister. Saramā did not yield. On the other hand she warned them to flee away from the place leaving the cows for Indra or take the consequences when the irrepressible hero would

67. KRPV p. 128.

68. Ibid., p. 192, cf. Hopkins, Epic Mythology, p. 19.

69. KRPV, p. 128 fn.

70. Ibid.

71. ZDMG 1859, Saramā's Botschaft, Th. Aufrecht, a free rendering (p. 494).

pounce upon them aided by the Angirasas, the Navagvas and others. Then she returned to Indra and reported her discovery, whereupon, he granted the milk-food and much more for her progeny, which, as the seer Parāśara, son of Śakti, declares, mankind today is enjoying.⁷² It is the direct result of Saramā's sagacity and influence with the Lord of the Gods. Saramā is respected by the seers and the gods as one who follows Rta the path of Truth or the established path. Hence she was entrusted with an important mission, and truly adhering to the Right path, she succeeded in catching the thieves. Now with the light-footed Saramā to lead the way, Indra, attended with the Angirasas and the Maruts marched against the enemy, rent apart the mountain; the Paṇis had apparently fled leaving the booty behind. The Angirasas convened an assembly to celebrate this victory : milk was poured profusely to all. Indra was praised and Saramā was warmly felicitated. Such is the Saramā episode construed just according to the Rgvedic text. It may be emphasised that the Saṁhitā has conceived and narrated the event in its most human aspects and bearings.

With the lapse of time, the great exploits and experiences of the Vedic Heroes, which were once green in everybody's memory and which were recorded in simple yet grand poetry, began to lose their freshness and point. The sacrifices expanded and the very same poetical expressions were used in several sacrificial contexts. Naturally the links became hazy, the relevancy came to be questioned. This was probably the cause of new interpretations and concepts gathering round old texts. Thus the Vājasaneyī Saṁhitā unequivocally pronounced Saramā as Speech (Vāg vai Saramā). The Taittirīya Āraṇyaka construed her as the sacred altar (Vedi). The Atharva-veda has a place for Saramā, she having been invoked in connection with the ceremony of the gift of a bull (Ṛṣabhotsarga). This is quite in consonance with the atmosphere of the Atharva-veda, which was charged with magic and charm which pleased the spirits and brought gratification to the worshippers who were now far removed from the plane of the virile gods and the resplendent sages of the Rgveda.

The Jaiminiya Brāhmaṇa, supported by the Śātyāyanaka, confirms the fact that Saramā took opportunity to secure the milk-food for her progeny, viz. mankind itself. So far as the story of the stolen cows is concerned, the JB says that Indra deputed Suparṇa first but, he having proved faithless, sent Saramā on the errand, and succeeded.

Yāska adheres to the main outlines of the original story but is disposed to designate Saramā, as Devaśunī (heavenly bitch). The cue of the betrayal motif was however taken up by the Bṛhaddevata, but the betrayal was ascribed to Saramā herself; Suparṇa is not mentioned at all. The other texts more or less agreeing with the main story, we come down to the Purāṇas, according to one of which the Vārāha, the legend is expanded on all sides : Indra's fortunes fluctuate often, he no longer enjoys world-supremacy. Now he is displaced from heaven and only after years of penance and sacrifice could he regain his old glory. Demons, other than the Paṇis, take the field, they are Vidyut and Suvidyut. Saramā is placed in charge of the cow-stall. These demons tried to lift the cows but she was quite vigilant and caught them, but alas, for the moment she fell a victim to their machinations and was lured by a draught of milk. Indra was clever enough to have deputed the Maruts to rush to her rescue in case she was attacked by anybody. Now they found out the ruse and reported to Indra. Saramā was unmasked. The cows were however recovered and the demons destroyed.

72. RV 1.72.8 Vidād gāvyaṁ Sarāmā dṛghām ūrvām yēnā nū kam mānuṣī bhōjate viṭ /

Taking up the Atharvan tread, we find Saramā as a Spirit to conjure with. She is invoked to free the child from the barking cough, for instance. She is again a 'manuṣya-graha' which attacks the womb of the females.

Thus following Saramā through the vicissitudes of Ages, one is left with the impression that her story is full of human appeal. Her character is upright, her conduct honorable and her heart full of affection for posterity. Were she the mother of the Sārameyas, i.e. the two brindled hounds of Yama, Śyāma and Śabala, it was only in this sense that she was responsible for the creation of the canine species in the same manner as Kadrū became the mother of serpents and Vinatā the mother of eagles. She was herself no dog or bitch. With the actual text of the Rgveda before us, it is quite unwarranted, nay, uncharitable, to describe her as Devaśunī—the 'divine bitch' as some have fancifully translated the term.

Mythological explanations of the Saramā legend have been offered by eminent scholars, saying that Saramā is the Storm or the Dawn. The tenor of Rgvedic poetry does not seem to favour any interpretation other than literary. Correlation of the live personalities of the Veda with the shining stars of heaven or the wonderful phenomena of Nature or the varied patterns of sacrificial tapestry has become traditional. It is a privilege of the specialist which cannot be denied. But for the common man, it is equally natural to conceive of them as quite human, as real events, inspiring and instructive.

CHAPTER II

THE LEGEND OF ŚUNAŚŚEPA

Śunaśśepa is a famous ṛṣi of old. Eight entire hymns¹ of the R̥gveda, aggregating to 107 verses, are ascribed to his seership, wherein he has praised and propitiated various gods :² Prajāpati, Agni, Savitr, Varuṇa, Viśvedevas, Indra, Aśvins, Uṣas and Soma-pavamāna. Śunaśśepa is himself referred to by name in three mantras. Two of them³ represent him in bonds having appealed to Varuṇa for release, whereas, the last mantra which is addressed to Agni and that by a different seer,⁴ informs us that Agni released Śunaśśepa "from a thousand stakes." Thus, Śunaśśepa's deliverance from the yūpastambha is undoubtedly a vedic fact. The present attempt is to trace the growth of this germ into a spreading chestnut despite the ravages of Time.

I

R̥GVEDA

The R̥gveda references are as follows :

(A) Verses wherein Śunaśśepa's name is mentioned.

- (a) Tād innāktam tād divā māhyamāhuh tād ayām kēto hṛdā ā vi caṣṭe /
Śunaśśēpo yām āhvad gr̥bhītāh sō asmān rājā Vāruṇo mumoktu //
RV 1.24.12.

Translation—

They say that to me by night and by day, and the same sentiment strikes my heart (mind) as well. May Varuṇa the king, to whom Śunaśśepa in bonds addressed himself, liberate us.

- (b) Śunaśśēpo hyāhvad gr̥bhītāh triṣvādityām drupadēṣu baddhāh / āvainam rājā Vāruṇah sasṛjyāt vidvām ādabdhō vī mumoktu pāsān //
RV 1.24.13.

1. RV 1.24 to 30 (7 hymns) 97 verses plus RV 9.3.10 verses, total 107.

2. Mentioned in the order in which they were praised (cf. M. Sarvā p. 6). Agni alone was approached twice (AB), once with one mantra (RV 1.24.2) and the second time with a series of 22 mantras (1.26.1-10 and 27.1-12). Geldner (Der R̥gveda I, p. 21) takes both verses (1.24.1. and 2) as addressed to Agni. The reason, perhaps, is that "Ka" is god Prajāpati according to tradition, but an interrogative pronoun according to recent opinion. "Ko vai nāma prajāpatih" (AB 3.21) iti śruteḥ kasya iti śabdāsāmānyāt anayā prajāpatireva upādṛtaḥ iti gamyate—Śāyana.

3. RV 1.24.12 and 13.

4. RV 5.2.7 Kumāra son of Atri is the ṛṣi.

Translation—

To three stakes bound, Śunaśśepa⁵ has verily addressed himself to the son of Aditi (Varuṇa). May Varuṇa the king set this (suppliant) free, may He, (who is) wise and above restrictions, entirely remove the fetters.

(c) Śunaś ciccēpam nīditam sahasrāt yūpād amuñco āsamiṣṭa hī śāḥ / evāsmād agne ví mumugdhi páśān hōtaś cikitva ihā tū niśādyā //⁶
RV 5.2.7.

Translation—

You did liberate the fast-fettered Śunaśśepa from a thousand fold stake and he became pacified, indeed. Even so do you, O Learned Priest of the gods, Agni, sitting here (with us) loosen our bonds.

On a close study of the above verses, certain impressions are irresistible. The first two verses which are ascribed to Śunaśśepa do not seem to be his at all from a rational point of view. In the first, the worshipper prays, "May Varuṇa the king, to whom Śunaśśepa addressed himself, liberate us," that is, on the precedent of Śunaśśepa's being saved by Varuṇa, a later devotee is seeking similar favour. All right, but the very next verse says: Śunaśśepa in fetters prays to God Varuṇa: may Varuṇa set him free and may he remove the fetters. The situation must be that while Śunaśśepa is praying to the god for succour, those by the side are recommending him for Varuṇa's mercy. This is in itself reasonable, but how, at all, is it consistent with the previous verse? There, it is definitely a past event, here

5. 'triṣu drupadeṣu baddhah' literally would mean 'bound to three stakes'. But the threefold nature of the stakes is not quite intelligible, whether Śunaśśepa was bound to three different posts or whether, as Sāyana says, he was tied to a single post in three places (trisaṅkhyākeṣu drupadeṣu droh kāṣṭhasya yūpasya padeṣu pradēśaviṣeṣeṣu baddhah). But, then, how to reconcile the other statement that Śunaśśepa was delivered from a thousand stakes (Śunaś ciccēpam nīditam sahasrād yūpād amuñcah)? Wilson (Tr. Vol. I, p. 63, 1850) understands a sort of tripod and adds "its specification is consistent with the popular legend." This is to be corroborated. Geldner translates 'an drei Blöcke gebunden' (i.e. bound to three blocks), and says in the note: "drupadā (eigentlich wohl Fussgestell) ist der Block, in den der Gefangene gelegt wurde (AV 19.47.9, 50.1), AV 6.63.3 das Füsseisen." While describing the process of niyojana i.e. fastening the victim to the sacrificial post, Sāyana's commentary (AB) is somewhat interesting: Aṅgarta is supposed to say—"aham enam Śunaśśepam yūpe niyoksyāmi raśanayā kaṭyām, śirasi, pādāyora baddhvā raśanāgrasya yūpe bandhanam niyojanam tad aham kariṣyāmi." Niyojana is defined as the act of fastening with rope the victim in three parts of his person namely, the waist, the head and the feet, and then the end of the rope to be tied to the sacrificial post. Rather an unequivocal explanation, it perhaps describes the actual practice at sacrifice as Sāyana knew (cf. RV 1.24.15 and 25.21). With such dubious evidence, it was best to translate literally.

6. Sahasrāt anekarūpāt yūpāt (Sāyana). Regarding the unusual separation of a proper noun Śunaś ciccēpam, Sāyana remarks—Śunaśśepamiti padasya madhye padāntarasya samhitāyām vyatyaenāvasthitiḥ. The advent of a different word in the middle of one word is therefore acknowledged to be an irregularity. cf. BD 2.115.

Śunaśśepam narāśamasam dyāva naḥ prthivī ca /
Niraskṛteti prabhrīty arthādāst kramo yathā // which indicates that the regular order of words was determined according to the sense, when the text read like—Śunaś ciccēpam, narā vā śamsam, dyāvā naḥ prthivī, niru svasāram askṛta. It is to be noted that the Padapāṭha restores the word e.g. Śunaśśepam/ cit etc.

it is like a thing happening in our presence. The verbs used in the two verses do not help us to disentangle, because they seem to have been used indiscriminately too, e.g. ahvat (a-Aorist Indicative, 3rd sing. of hū, to call), mumoktu (perfect imperative, 3rd sing. of muc, to release), sasrjyāt (perfect optative, 3rd sing. of srj, to emit).⁷ Hence they cannot enlighten the sequence of events. The legend depicts that these mantras were uttered by Śunaśśepa in order to obtain release, whereas the two verses, just referred to regard the release as a thing of the past. Two inferences are possible. (a) These are not Śunaśśepa hymns at all (RV 1.24 to 30), but tradition so ascribes, i.e. at the Saṁhitā stage, these hymns were assembled and the occurrence of Śunaśśepa's name in the two verses was responsible for the ascription; hence we shall accept it on faith. (b) Or, the two verses in question are a later insertion or interpolation, if that fearful word may be used: The various hymns seen by Śunaśśepa, handed down by tradition, were put together by the Saṁhitā-designers, in the course of which it is just possible that these two verses were inserted in order to remind themselves of that great Vedic event. However reasonable, the first inference appears rather irrational, as it carries possibilities to the very extreme. The second inference may be considered.⁸ It becomes plausible if we remove the two verses from their context and review the whole collection; then, it will read like the group of praises and psalms from any other poet of the R̥gveda. The two verses, no doubt, lend colour to the whole group of seven hymns (RV 1.24-30) and specially to RV 1.24.1 and 2, in the light of the "Parar̥ksata-gāthā" or the Śunaśśepākhyāna which is elaborately related in the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa.⁹

If scholars believe in the theory of interpolation as an important and inevitable factor in textual criticism, then there can be no reason to demur at this conclusion, namely, Śunaśśepa did not compose the two mantras (1.24.12) and 13), but a later poet, possibly the compilers of the Śatarecina maṇḍala. Interpolation is a natural instinct in man and as such cannot be considered a crime. Considering the texts which have been transmitted for centuries by oral tradition only—viz. the Veda and Vedic literature—the aspect of interpolation need not be doubted at all, "for the organs of tradition were not machines, but men."¹⁰

It is well-known that many verses and hymns have formed part of the later Saṁhitās of the Yajus, Sāma and Atharva-vedas. Many a variant reading has been noticed of the R̥gvedic text.¹¹ Such a thing could be detected because of the availability, of the different recensions. In the case of the R̥gveda, only the

7. MVG paragraphs 508, 490 and 489 respectively.

8. Compare Roth's opinion, analogous to this, explained by Keith in his introduction to the R̥g-Veda Brāhmaṇas Translated (HOS Vol. 25—1920) p. 64.

9. 7.13-18, more of this in another section.

10. Dr. Katre, Introduction to Indian Textual Criticism (K. P. H., Bombay, 1941), p. 54. The nature and causes of corruption in transmitted texts have been analysed and no less than 19 of them have been enumerated with illustrations (chapter V). If the principles are applied to the Vedic Text-transmission as well, important results may be obtained.

11. To give an instance, please see note 22 in the previous chapter.

Śākala-Saṁhitā is what we have now. Who knows what Bāṣkala and others would have revealed in a crucial passage like this ?

Another fact is worth notice. Śunaśśepa's deliverance is, to Viśvāmitra, a feather in the cap. The achievement is of no less magnitude than his crossing of the Rivers (RV 3.33). But Śunaśśepa, the god-given (Deva-rāta) son and heir to Viśvāmitra, is nowhere, even indirectly, mentioned in the Viśvāmitra maṇḍala of two and sixty hymns either by the Seer or by his descendents. Nor is this miracle reflected anywhere among the hundred and four hymns of Vasiṣṭha, who officiated as the Brahmā priest in that sacrifice which witnessed Śunaśśepa's ' sacrifice ' and deliverance. Further, it was the fancy of a member of the Atri family, —in no way connected with the affair, —to record the event in clear terms (Śunaś cicchēpam niditam saḥsārāt, yūpād amuñco āsamīṣṭa hī śāb/ 5.2.7^{ab}). Undoubtedly, Kumāra Ātreya (the Ṛṣi of the hymn) is describing what was current in his family circle. A slight disharmony may be discerned even here in that Agni delivered Śunaśśepa from the stakes, not Varuṇa. Strangely enough, the Saṁhitā appears to corroborate this, because Śunaśśepa, —let us believe the traditional account for the moment—after approaching God KA in the first instance (1.24.1), addresses himself next to Agni (Agnér vayām prathamāsyāmṛtānām mánāmahe cāru devāsya náma// 1.24.2).

There is, of course, an appeal to Varuṇa in 1.24.12 and 13 for freedom from the bonds, but these we have preferred to consider as later insertions. 1.24.15¹² and 1.25.21¹³ appeal to Varuṇa to release the chains from the top, the middle and the bottom. The pāśa is a special attribute of Varuṇa¹⁴ and a prayer to him should be naturally charged with that sentiment. Śunaśśepa was Varuṇa-grhita¹⁵ (seized by Varuṇa), says the Yajurveda. According to the graphic narration in the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa, the release from the fetters was actually effected when the three mantras in praise of Uṣas¹⁶ were uttered one by one. So with regard to this great Deliverance, we shall revert to the original document, the Ṛgveda, and repeat the problem which faced Śunaśśepa himself—" which God's charming name shall we cherish " !

(B) Other verses indirectly bearing on the Śunaśśepa legend :

The opening verses of the Śunaśśepa series have a peculiar appeal ; hence they are recorded here—

12. Ūduttamām Varuṇa pāśam asmād āvādhāmām ví madhyamām śrathāya / áthā vayām āditya vraté távānāgaso āditye syāma //

13. Ūduttamām mumugdhi no ví pāśam madhyamām erta / āvādhāmāni jīvāse //

14. Release from Varuṇa-pāśa is the burden of the prayers addressed to that God in all the Saṁhitās, most of which do not refer to the Śunaśśepa incident at all. E.g. the verse " Ūduttamām," which is a prayer to Varuṇa for release from his fetters is cited about 20 times in the various Vedic texts, it is only on two occasions it is associated with Śunaśśepa. Cf. Bloomfield's concordance, and VI 2.386 n4 under Śunaśśepa.

15. Cf. TS 5.2.1.3 ; KS 19.11.

16. RV 1.30.20-22 (Sa uṣasam tuṣṭāva uttarepa tṛena / tasya ha sma rcyrcyuktāyām ví pāśo mumuce / AV 7.16).

Kāśya nūnām katamāśyāmṛtānām mánāmahe cāru devāśya nāma // kó no mahyā́ áditaye púnar dāt pitāram ea drśéyam mātāram ea //
 RV 1.24.1.

Agnér vayām prathamāśyāmṛtānām
 mánāmahe cāru devāśya nāma // sá no mahyā́ áditaye púnar dāt
 pitāram ea drśéyam mātāram ea //
 RV 1.24.2.

Translation—

Of whom or of which god among the immortals shall we cherish the charming name? Who would give us back to the great Aditi? And would I ever see father and mother?¹⁷

God Agni's charming name we shall cherish, for he is the first of the immortals. He would give us back to the great Aditi. And then would I see father and mother.

Shorn of the story-background, the first verse reflects the fervency with which the devotee asks himself the question: which god's name shall we cherish? Such an enquiring spirit is quite in consonance with the spirit of the Vedic seer, at the dawn of our civilization. Compare the other hymn 'Kāśmaī devāya' which has a similar appeal. But it is the reference to the father and the mother that makes the allusion to some extent absolutely reasonable if not necessary.

17. Text—pitāram ea drśéyam mātāram ea. This is usually understood to express the anxiety on the part of Śunaśśepa to get back to his parents, so he laments—am I destined to see my parents once again and so on. (cf. Nītimāñjarī. st. 11). This is not correct. As we agree that the verses are expressed by Śunaśśepa, it is necessary to look into the situation in which he simply ran, door to door, in search of a saviour. The idea is: thus have I been forsaken by parents who gave me birth in this world. Ah, they are going to cut me up as if I were an animal! Is there a god who could restore me to life on Earth (to Aditi)? Can I find a father and a mother once again? Let me think of Agni, he is the foremost of the gods. He will restore me to life and I would find a father and a mother (in him, i.e. in Agni indeed). That is how Śunaśśepa's situation is heightened with pathos. He never wished to run back to his parents. (cf. Rāmāyaṇa 1.64.4-Corresio)

Na me'sti mātā na pitā na suhṛinna ea bāndhuvāḥ /
 Trātum arhasi mām tyaktam bandhubhīḥ śaraṇāgatam //

This is corroborated by the evidence of the Aitareya which depicts the situation graphically:

athā ha Śunaśśepa iksāṇcakre, amānuṣam iva vai mā viśasiṣyanti, hantāham devatā upadhāvāmīti, sa prajāpatim eva prathamam devatānām anusasāra, kasya nūnām katamāśyāmṛtānām ityeta yarcā /

As the father Ajigarta came forward, sharpening the knife, in order to cut him up, Śunaśśepa, in utter consternation and helplessness, bursts forth with the mantra, 'kasya nūnām' ending with 'pitāram ea drśéyam mātāram ea'. In such a situation, that Śunaśśepa was prompted by filial love to say it, is truly incoherent. Secondly, we may observe that Śunaśśepa's lament, whether he is destined to find a father and a mother on earth when the real parents deserted him, was heard by the gods. Viśvāmitra became the father; gods blessed the change over, which was in the nature of an adoption; Śunaśśepa was named Devarāta: 'God-given'.

We may at once believe that Śunaśśepa uttered it when he was in such a predicament. It was at a later stage of course that the memorable verses found place in the Saṁhitā.

One word about the hundred verses, alleged by the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa to have been uttered by Śunaśśepa when he was yoked for the sacrifice. A perusal of the said verses will at once tell us, from their tenor and content, that they were not appropriate for the occasion.¹⁸ A man destined to die would first pray for his life, not for cattle, not for the destruction of the enemy; nor even could he have the peace of mind to dilate upon the merits and exploits of each god in such a complacent manner, sometimes providing even sublime and serene poetry. Except for three or four verses in the whole series,¹⁹ there is not much of a direct appeal for deliverance from the stakes. Dare we then discredit the account of the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa? No, we need not discredit, but we can clearly perceive the raison d'être of such a development.

Mr. Narahari²⁰ has related the Śunaśśepa hymns indicated in the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa straight to their R̥gvedic source, chapter and verse, about which fact, however, there was never a doubt implied or expressed. Keith's observation, with which Narahari is unable to agree,²¹ was with regard not to the authenticity but to the relevancy of the Śunaśśepa hymns in their being worked into the Śunaśśepa legend. Keith has in view the subject-matter and the general trend of the hymns while making the remark in question.²² After tracing the AB quotations to their R̥gvedic source, Narahari declares "It is thus clear that the account given in the AB about Śunaśśepa is ratified to a very great extent by the R̥gveda."

18. cf. Keith. JRAS (1911), p. 988, Winternitz HIL Vol. I, p. 215 (1927); Wilson quoting Dr. Rosen (Tr. Vol. I, p. 60 original edition), also Muir, OST 1. p.359.

19. RV 1.24.1,2,15; 25.21.

20. Ref. 'A Volume of Studies in Indology' presented to Prof. P. V. Kane (Poona, 1941). Mr. Narahari's article entitled 'The Legend of Sunah̥śepa in Vedic and post-Vedic Literature,' pp. 302-307.

21. "It is admittedly the case that the R̥gveda verses which are put in the mouth of Sunah̥śepa have nothing to do with the legend in the Brāhmaṇa," Keith. JRAS (1911) p. 988.

22. The expression Satareina is thus explained by the Aitareya Āraṇyaka:

Tam śatam varṣānyabhyāreāt tasmāt śatareinas tasmācchatareina ityācakṣata etam eva śantam || 2.2.1.
tam varṣānyabhyāreāt tasmāt śatareinas tasmācchatareina ityācakṣata etam eva śantam || 2.2.1.

"For a hundred years he approached it. Therefore a hundred are the years of the life of man. Because he approached him for one hundred years, therefore, they are the Satareins. Therefore they call him who is (prāṇa) the Satareins." Tr. Keith (Anecdota Oxoniensia Series, Oxford).

But Śaṅkaraśiṣya (Macdonell, Sarvā. p. 59) has a more rational explanation. Ādyaṁaṇḍa-lasthā śayāḥ Satareina iti samjñitāḥ/ R̥cām śatam śatareina/ Ādyaśyareṣṇ ṛkśatayogena chatrin-yāyena śatareinaḥ sarve/ Dvyadhūke'pi śatoktīrbāhulyāt/ Uktam hi—

Śatareisaṁjñā vijñeyā hyādyamaṇḍaladarśināḥ /
Dadarśādau Madhucchandā dvyadhikam yad r̥cām śatam /
Tatsāhucaryād anye'pi vijñeyās tu Śatareinaḥ /
Achatrās chatrināikena yathā vai chatrīṇo'bhavan /

According to the tabular statement of the Sarvānukrama, prepared by Max Müller, as complement to his first edition of RV with Śāyana's commentary, there are altogether 16 seers (191 hymns and 1071 verses) in the first maṇḍala, many of the seers are centuries e.g. Madhucchanda Vaiśvāmitra (102), Medhātithi Kāṇva (143), Śunaśśepa (97), Hiraṇyastipa (71), Ghaṇa Kāṇva (96), Praskāṇva

No clear evidence is adduced to support this statement which is rather misleading and untrue. The quotations which are in the nature of praise and prayer to the several gods, do by no stretch of imagination, suggest any detail of the story. The R̥gvedic statement has only this much to say that Śunaśśepa who had been bound by fetters to the sacrificial post was liberated by Varuṇa (1.24.12) or by Agni (5.2.7) according to another seer. It is only reasonable to suppose that the Śataṛcina maṇḍala²² was compiled, by putting together the centurion seers and their hymns together; among them came the Ṛṣi Śunaśśepa. Based on the then current popular stories, the redactors introduced the name of Śunaśśepa also in the collection, as above explained. And the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa spun out a beautiful yarn and found use for the series of hymns collected in the maṇḍala. It cannot be explained, however, why and how the Śunaśśepa hymn in the Pavamāna maṇḍala (RV 9.3) escaped the notice of the AB in this connection. Needless to say that Soma was as much an object of praise in a sacrifice as the other gods.

II

SAMHITĀS OTHER THAN THE R̥GVEDA

(1) The Taittiriya Saṁhitā has the following passage referring to Śunaśśepa story—

Śunaśśepam Ājigartim Vārūno'grhṇāt sá etám Vārūṇīm apaśyat táyā vai sá ātmānam Varuṇapāśād amuñcat Vārūṇo vá etám grhṇāti yá ukhām pratimuñcāta úduttamām Varuṇa pāsam asmād ityāhātmānam evaitāyā /²³

“Varuṇa seized Śunaśśepa Ājigarti, he saw this verse adressed to Varuṇa, by it he freed himself from the noose of Varuṇa; Varuṇa seizes him who takes the fire-pan, “From us the highest knot, O Varuṇa” he says, verily, thereby he frees himself from Varuṇa's noose.”²⁴

The Taittiriya context is the ‘preparation of the ground for the Fire’. It can be seen how artificial is the connection of the R̥gvedic mantra. ‘Úduttamām’ (RV 1.24.15) praying Varuṇa to loosen his pāśa at the top, middle and bottom. The outlook is entirely sacrificial. At any rate what is important for our study is the allusion to the bare fact that Śunaśśepa was seized by Varuṇa and when he praised him with this mantra “Úduttamām”²⁵ he was released from the fetters.

Kāṇva (82), Savya Āṅgīrasa (72), Nodhā Gautama (74), Parāśara Śāktya (56), Gotama Rāhūgaṇa (204), Kutsa Āṅgīrasa (212), Kakṣīvat (151), Paruṣhepa (100), Dirghatamas (212) and Agastya (218). Just a few verses are not accounted as they occur in the Samvāda hymns. A single hymn of 8 verses is ascribed to Jetā Mādhuccandasa. The above details are given in order to show that after the family-maṇḍalas, the next step in the R̥gveda-redaction was to bring together the the works of seers, next in importance. No definite principle can yet be discerned, underlying these “collected works.”

23. TS 5.2.1.3 (Ānandāśrama edition).

24. Tr. Keith. The Veda of the Black Yajus School (BOS Vols. 18 and 19) 1914. The present reference is to Vol. 19 p. 401.

25. This verse has been borrowed from RV by all the other Saṁhitās, which fact emphasises the importance of God Varuṇa in men's conduct and outlook. Release from the chain of worldly existence or final emancipation is yet the highest pursuit of man according to our belief even today.

(2) The Kāṭhaka Saṁhitā—

.....Uduttamam Varuṇa pāśam asmad iti Śunaśśepo vā etām Ājigartir Varuṇagrṛhito'paśyat tayā vai sa Varuṇapāśād amucyata Varuṇapāśam evaitayā pramuṇicate ... // ²⁶

This passage provides support for the version of the TS. Śunaśśepa, son of Ājigarta, seized by Varuṇa saw the mantra "Uduttamam" etc. and thereby was freed from Varuṇa's noose, and Varuṇa's noose will loosen itself with this mantra.

(3) The Kapiṣṭhala-Kaṭha²⁷ alludes to the Śunaśśepa legend in exactly the same words as the above.

(4) The Atharva-Veda Saṁhitā does not record the Śunaśśepa story but has two hymns of which he is the Seer, viz. AV. 6.25 and 7.83.²⁸ The former according to Kauśika Sūtra accompanies a rite against a disease of the neck and shoulders (gaṇḍāmālā). The latter is a hymn to Varuṇa praying for relief from fetters. It is also held as a remedy against dropsy. The third verse of this hymn is the same as RV 1.24.15, the famous "Uduttamam."

III

BRĀHMAṆAS

(1) Śunaśśepa is immortalised in the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa.²⁹ It is mysterious, however, that neither the famous Vedic seer nor the story of his deliverance is ever referred to in any other Brāhmaṇa.

To recapitulate the story as given in the AB: Hariścandra of the Ikṣvāku race, son of Vedhas, was childless. Once the sages Parvata and Nārada were his guests. The king asked³⁰ the latter with wonderment as to why all beings under the Sun, endowed with intelligence or no, alike long for a son, what is it exactly they gain etc. And Nārada came forth with his reply in ten gāthās, expatiating on the merits of begetting a son, e.g. "Food is life for man, clothing his protection, gold his beauty, cattle his strength. His wife is a friend, his daughter is a pity, but the son is his Light in the highest world."³¹ Nārada further, advised Hariścandra to approach Varuṇa praying for a son whom he might again surrender to him in a sacrifice. Accordingly the king approached Varuṇa who granted his request.

26. KS 19.11 (Kāṭhaka-Saṁhitā ed. Satavalekar, Aundh)

27. Kap. S. 21.1 (Kapiṣṭhala-Kaṭha-Saṁhitā ed. Raghu Vira, L)

28. As a seer of hymns, Śunaśśepa appears in a few other Saṁhitās e.g. SV. Pūrvāreika 1.2.5,7; 1.3.8; 2.6.9,10; 2.7.9. VS 10.27-34, 11.14-16, 12.12, 18.45-53, 21.1,2; 35.11. These are but stray verses, most of which are repetitions of his Rgvedic composition. As they do not bear on the legend of Śunaśśepa, no further consideration would be necessary. The list of Vedic Rsis is conveniently compiled by C. V. Vaidya in his History of Sanskrit Literature: Vedic Period (1930), pp. 200 and 207.

29. AB 7.13-18 (Ānandāśrama edition).

30. Yam nu imam putram icchanti ye vijānanti ye ca na / kim svit putreṇa vindate tan ma śakyva Nārada // Ibid.7.13.

31. Annam ha prāṇaḥ śaraṇam ha vāso rūpam hiraṇyam paśavo vivāhaḥ / Sakṣā ha jāyā kṛpāṇam ha duhitā jyotiḥ ha putraḥ parama vyoman // Ibid.

The son, Rohita, was born. But on the birth of the Light of his heart as much as of the worlds, the king was loth to give him up to the God. So he pleaded excuses and put off the dreadful event successively, for ten days of confinement, then when the teeth emerge, when they fall, emerge again, and finally when the boy grows into a youth fit to wear armour. Varuṇa persisted in his demand and Rohita, being apprised by the father of the old contract with the God, somehow did not submit but went away to the forest, bow in hand. For one full year he wandered. Meanwhile Varuṇa was wroth and seized Hariścandra, who, as a result began to suffer from dropsy. Rohita heard this and was coming back to town when Indra, in the guise of a man, came up and exhorted him to wander more and more. There is such good in moving about, not sitting idle, for "The fortune of a man who sits, sits also, it rises when he rises, it sleeps when he sleeps, it moves well when he moves. Wander!"³² Or again, "He who wanders finds honey, he who wanders finds sweet figs (udumbaram); look at the pre-eminence of the Sun, who wandering, never³³ tires." Thus on the sixth round, Rohita met, in the forest, the sage Ajigarta, son of Sūryavasa, seized by starvation.³⁴ He had three sons, Śunaḥpuecha Śunaśśepa and Śunolāṅgūla. Rohita said, "O sage, I will give a hundred, I will buy myself off with one of these (sons)." Then the father was unwilling to part with the eldest, and the mother with the youngest. Hence the middle one Śunaśśepa was sold. Rohita brought him to his father and told him his proposal. Hariścandra approached Varuṇa who readily agreed.

The sacrifice began, eminent priests officiating. Viśvāmitra as Hotṛ, Jamadagni as Adhvaryu, Ayāśya as Udāgṛ and Vaśiṣṭha as Brahmā. The victim was due to be taken through various rites before the actual sacrifice, but the rites of niyojana (binding the paśu to the stake) and viśasana (cutting it up with knife) were too repulsive to the good Jamadagni (the Adhvaryu, on whom devolved all the manual labour of the Sacrifice), he refused. There came this Ajigarta, again, willing to bind him to the stake for a hundred more; and further to cut him up with knife for a third hundred cows. Inhumanity perhaps reached its zenith, difficult even for the gods to bear.³⁵ So, when the poor victim, Śunaśśepa, a human being after all, endowed with thinking, poured forth his fervent prayers to the gods in utter

32. Āste bhaga āśinasya ūrdhvas tiṣṭhātī tiṣṭhataḥ /
 Śete nipadyamānasya carāti carato bhagaḥ caraiva // Ibid. 7.15.

33. Caran vai madhu vindati caran svādum udumbaram /
 Sūryasya paśya śremāṇam yo na tandrayate caran // Ibid.

34. Here is a genuine difficulty. The text reads—"āśanayā paritam" how can it mean 'overcome with hunger'? It were well to have āśanayā (= āśanena, fern. being Vedic). Keith evidently felt it; and preferred the Śākh SS reading 'āśanāyāparitam'. (Rig-Veda Brāhmaṇas Translated. HOS Vol. 25, 1920, p. 303 n. 9). Āśanāyā (f) = hunger (Monier-Williams). But, pray, look at the other ghastly attribute, 'putram bhakṣamāṇam' in the Śākhāyana! Perhaps that renders Rohita's offer to buy up the son a logical step.

35. VI says that at this stage Viśvāmitra's advice inspired Śunaśśepa to ask the gods to release him. So also Wilson in his resumé. This is not true to the Aitareya, wherein, Śunaśśepa, having been driven by necessity, simply 'ran' to the gods—"amānuṣamiva vai mā viśasiyanti, hantāham devatā upadhāvāmīti". Ref. VI, II, pp. 335-6, Wilson RV Tr. Vol. I, p. 60 n. Viśvāmitra's advice to the effect is, no doubt, mentioned in later literature like the Rāmāyaṇa, which however provides justification for Śunaśśepa choosing to sit on the lap of Viśvāmitra (aṅkam āśāda, see infra 38) amidst so many great men.

helplessness, they heard! Agni, the liaison deity, between gods and mortals, steered Śunaśśepa through; the catastrophe was averted. (Prajāpati), Agni, Savitr, Varuṇa, Viśvedevas, Indra, Aśvins and Uṣas—all these were propitiated with fulsome praise. Indra presented a golden chariot to Śunaśśepa. As the praise of Uṣas, in three verses, was being uttered, the bonds fell off one by one. Śunaśśepa was free. And Hariścandra was at the same time cured of the ailment.³⁶

Then the high priests invited Śunaśśepa to perform the closing rite called the abhiṣecanīya. Śunaśśepa in this ceremony saw what is called the 'añjassava',³⁷ a certain improved method of pressing the Soma. Naturally afterwards, he became the idol of admiration of all concerned. But what was his station in future? Forsaken by his parents, what home to seek for shelter? He straight away went and sat on the lap of Viśvāmitra, as a son sits on the father's.³⁸ When "all's well that end's well," Ajigarata asked Viśvāmitra to give back his son. The latter refused on the ground that the gods gave Śunaśśepa to him. Thus he became Devarāta Vaiśvāmitra. Then Ajigarta addressed his invitation to Śunaśśepa himself— "At least, you come, both of us (father and mother) invite you. Āngirasa you are by birth, son of Ajigarta and reputed as poet. O sage, do not break away from the ancestral line. Do return to me." How courteous and complimentary! Śunaśśepa, however, sharply retorted: "They saw you, knife in hand, a thing which they did not find even among the Śūdras. And in lieu of me, you, O Āngiras, chose to have three hundred cows." "That is just what burns my heart, my dear," replied Ajigarta, "I verily committed a sin. Let me make amends, all the three hundred cows will go to you." Śunaśśepa said again, "Once a man commits sin, he will surely commit another. You did not shun to behave like a Śūdra, and an inexpiable sin have you committed." Viśvāmitra supported this last statement, rapprochement was impossible.

Viśvāmitra renewed his invitation to Śunaśśepa to join him only: "You shall be the eldest of my sons. Your progeny will have priority. My divine heritage shall be yours, with that I invite you." Much too clever for an ancient tale: Śunaśśepa wanted his rank and status in the family to be clearly defined and accepted unequivocally by all the heirs concerned. Śunaśśepa in this context addressed Viśvāmitra as 'Rājaputra,' which, according to Sāyana, raised an issue as to how a Brāhmaṇa by birth can change over to a Kṣatriya clan. But Viśvāmitra, "friend of all," was truly magnanimous. He had a hundred and one sons. He called them all promptly, and said "Listen to me Madhucchandas, Rṣabha, Renu, Aṣṭaka (and all). Are there any among you brothers who are not for Śunaśśepa's priority?"³⁹ Madhucchandas was midmost of the sons. The fifty brothers elder to 36. The pertinent RV references have been considered in the previous section.

37. Apart from the particular act of Soma-pressing, this expression is applied by Sāyana to the final rite itself—So'yam añjassavaḥ iṣṭipaśusāṅkaryamantareṇa añjasā rjumārgēṇa anuṣṭhitatvāt/ Ibid. 7.17.

38. atha ha Śunaśśepo Viśvāmitrasyaṅkam āśasāda / Ibid.

39. atha ha Viśvāmitrah putrān āmantrayāmāsa Madhucchandāḥ śrotana Rṣabho Renu Aṣṭakāḥ / Ye ke ca bhrātaraḥ stha nāsmat jyaṣṭhyāya kulpadhvam iti // Ibid. 7.17.

him thought that the proposal was not in their interest, they were cursed by the angry father into low and barbarous life. The other fifty with Madhucchandas as leader⁴⁰ humbly submitted : whatever father proposes, we shall abide by, and turning to Śunaśśepa, gave him word also, saying ' we shall put you in front and shall remain behind you.' Viśvāmitra was much pleased, blessed them all heartily. Devarāta (Śunaśśepa) inherited a double share viz. the overlordship of the Jahnus and the divine lore.⁴¹

This is the Śunaśśepa legend which is prescribed to be narrated at a king's coronation. Seated on a golden seat, the Hotā narrates, seated also on a golden seat, the Adhvaryu responds ; and the king just after being anointed listens. The narrative ends with the dakṣiṇā : a thousand for the narrator, a hundred for him who responds ; the seats and a white mule chariot also to the Hotā. The phalaśruti declares one is absolved of all sin, and those who desire sons will get them by causing this story to be narrated.

Sahasram ākhyātre dadyācchatam parigaritre etc caivāsane śvetaś caśvatariratho hotuḥ, putrakāmā hāpyākhyāpayeran labhante ha putrān labhante ha putrān // (AB 7.18).

The legend as narrated by the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa may now be briefly reviewed. The R̥gvedic nucleus consists merely of Śunaśśepa's deliverance from the pāśa (fetters) by Varuṇa or may be by Agni, and eight hymns having a total of 107 verses (RV 1.24 to 30.97 verses, plus RV 9.3 having 10 = 107) have been ascribed to his seership. It is important that there is no allusion to the episode in the maṇḍalas of the Viśvāmitras or the Vasiṣṭhas, whereas an unconnected Ātreya, Ṛṣi Sadāpr̥ṇa, (RV 5.2.7) praises Agni for the great act. No wonder, the episode finds place in the Śatareina maṇḍala, which constitutes, so to say, the "collected works" of the centurion seers. Most, if not all, legends of the R̥gveda are concentrated in the first Maṇḍala. So when the hymns of the Ṛṣi Śunaśśepa were put together, possibly, the redactors of the Saṁhitā introduced the two verses bearing Śunaśśepa's name. It is clearly patchwork and the two verses, though occurring consecutively, betray a lack of logical sequence.

Between the age of the R̥gveda and that of the Brāhmaṇa, the popular element had full sway evidently and quite a harmonious account has been presented in the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa. The Śunaśśepa-event as the 'middle' part we have a beginning and an end tagged on. The Age represented the glorification of the Karma-kāṇḍa, performance of sacrifices was the rule of the day. Varuṇa as the Lord of 40. Witness the fate of the midmost son, again ! Madhucchandas, is called upon to submit to family interests like Śunaśśepa himself.

41. Adhivata Devarāto rikthayor ubhayor ṛṣiḥ / Jahnūnām cādhipatyē daive vede ca Gāthiṇām // (AB 7.18). And to pursue the scholastic issue, it may be realised that the grant of the divine lore helped Śunaśśepa to transfer himself to the Kṣatriya family. But was it not a fact that the same divine lore, of which Viśvāmitra was already the proud possessor, had already elevated him to the rank and status of a Brāhmaṇa ? The whole contention is thoroughly unfounded as we shall prove in the next chapter that Viśvāmitra was a Ṛṣi par excellence and belonged to an age when there was no such distinction, when efficiency and wisdom alone raised a man to the pedestal.

Pāśa (Pāśī) was the most powerful god, more than his grace, which was not wanting, his wrath kept all people alert. Therefore the Samhitās reverberate with prayers to appease his anger. The pact between Hariścandra and Varuṇa to sacrifice even the son if he should be born, the natural disinclination to sacrifice the son—after he is born, man dodging god, the grown-up youth finding the wide world more inviting than heaven through the medium of the gallows, divine wrath, inevitable suffering and hunting for expiation, then a silver lining in the cloud—these are trends which are realistic and which have been logically worked into a fitting prologue.

Even so the epilogue. Śunaśśepa, by the grace of the gods, was reborn as it were, having been saved from the yūpa. To whom should he belong? What rank should he hold? Śunaśśepa himself elected to join Viśvāmitra, who, true to his name, was the 'friend of all', the champion of the distressed. Certain home touches give perfection to the denouement. Viśvāmitra had a hundred and one sons. Perhaps in the exuberance of his generous heart, the great sage conferred upon the god-given son all privileges of primogeniture. One's heart would melt with sympathy for that army of forsaken sons, a hundred and one, and specially the fifty recalcitrant ones that were cursed. But the sage who made and unmade things knew best.

Vajrād api kaṭhorāṇi mrdūni kusumād api /
Lokottarāṇām cetāmsi ko hi vijñātum arhati //42

Inscrutable are the minds of the superior among men, harder than diamond, softer than flower !

Thus the Vedic outline of Śunaśśepa having been saved from Death by the grace of the gods has developed into an elaborate narrative which has come to embody so much of mundane matter like the longing of a childless man contrasted with the despair of a prolific parent with a hundred (and one) sons, half of them recalcitrant, contrasted, again, with the helplessness of an indigent parent who is prepared in lieu of a hundred kine to surrender a son to be sacrificed at the altar, poverty painfully exaggerated to the extent of even the names being ugly and unbecoming : Śunaśśepa, Śunaḥpuccha, Śunolāṅgūla, the age-long principle and process of changing over to a different family (adoption), withal, the joy of having a son, the Light of this and the other world, finally, the glorification of the sacrifice, the bounteous dakṣiṇā not excluded.

(2) The Śāṅkhāyana Śrauta Sūtra repeats the legend as found in the AB, but for a few changes which are of no consequence. There are a number of verbal differences, such as are natural to dittography.

(a) According to AB Rohita finds Ajigarta in the sixth year of wandering, in the Śrauta Sūtra, in the seventh year. The benefits of wandering recited every-time by the disguised Indra communicating new ideas are lacking here ; it is almost a repetition of the verse of the sixth peregrination :

Caran vai madhu vindatyapacinvan parūṣakam /
Uttiṣṭhan vindate śriyam na niṣat kiñcanāvati //⁴³

“Wandering he obtains honey, wandering the sweet berry, rising he obtains wealth, sitting nothing at all.” Whereas, in the previous verse, the reference to the Sun’s example gave a thrilling finish to the dictum of travel :

Caran vai madhu vindati caran svādum udumbaram /
Sūryasya paśya śremāṇam yo na tandrayate caran//⁴⁴

“Wandering he obtains honey, wandering the sweet figs, witness the pre-eminence of the Sun who, wandering, never tires.”

(b) Secondly, Ajigarta is represented as eating the son when Rohita accosted him : So’jigartam Sauyavasim ṛṣim aśanāyāparitam putram bhakṣamāṇam aranyam upeyāya /⁴⁵ This should be regarded only as an instance of the moss which inevitably collects as the stream of tradition flows through different mouths.

(c) Thirdly, as soon as he was set free, Śunaśśepa sees the “aṅjassava” according to Śāṅkhāyana, whereas he does so in the Aitareya after a magnanimous invitation from the high priests :

tam ṛtvija ūcus tvameva no’syāhnas samsthām adhigacchetyatha haitam Śunaśśepo’ṅjassavam dadarśa //⁴⁶

IV

VEDIC ANCILLARIES

(1) The Nirukta

Yāska does not deal with the Śunaśśepa legend nor does he comment on any of the Śunaśśepa verses of the RV. There is however a reference⁴⁷ to his being sold for price, in illustration of the practice of selling boys and girls. Discussing the question of inheritance, it is said that both the son and daughter have a right to it. Manu also supported the view.⁴⁸ But some do not favour the daughter ;

43. Śāṅkh. ŚS. Hillebrandt’s edition (Bibliotheca Indica) 1888. Vol. I, p. 191.

44. Already quoted n. 33 supra.

45. Śāṅkh ŚS. p. 191.

46. AB 7.18.

47. Nir. 3.4.

48. Aśiṣeṣa putrāṇām dāyā bhavati dharmataḥ / mithunānām visargādaḥ mānuṣ Svāyambhuvō’bravīt //

Note—the quotation is not traced to its source. The śloka is accented in Sarup’s edition (1927, text only). Bombay Venkatesvara Press edn. does not accent it, though Durga’s commentary accents the pratika thereof. BSS Edn. (Bhadrakamkar) follows suit ; Anandāśrama. The statement is, clearly, made by Manu, son of Svayambhū, at the beginning of creation (visargādaḥ), whereas we are in the Age of Manu Valvasvata ! Hence Yāska continues—na duhitara ityeke / * tasmāt pumān dāyāo’dāyādā strī * / iti vījāyate / * tasmāt striyam jātām parīśyanti na pumāmsam / iti ca // Strīpām dānavikrayātisargā vidyante na pumśah / pumso’pityeke / Śaunaśśepe darśanāt / abhūrātmativāda ityaparam // for she is cast off as soon as born, not the son. Moreover, with regard to women, they are given away, sold or abandoned; not so with regard to men. Here it is pointed out that these three actions relate to men also as in the case of Śunaśśepa (Śaunaśśepe darśanāt). The discussion concludes that a brotherless daughter has a claim for inheritance. The whole crux lies in the interpretation of RV 3.31.1, which is outside our purview.

Referring thus to the fact of Śunaśśepa being sold for price, Yāska adds support to the Aitareya version to that extent.

Commenting on the illustration provided by Śunaśśepa, Skanda and Maheśvara explain the giving away (dāna) in the words of the AB 'anena tvā yajā' (Hariścandra to Varuṇa), the bargain in Rohita's words to Hariścandra 'anena ātmānam niṣkrīṇā,' the abandonment also is told— 'atisargo'pi Viśvāmitreṇa kṛtaḥ śrūyate jyāyāmsō Madhucchandasaḥ, asamañjasaś ca Sagareṇa/ (jyāyāmsō ityasya sthāne jyāyaso iti pāṭha ucitaḥ/ Ed. Sarup).⁴⁹ We may somehow make it out that those who were elder to Madhucchandas were abandoned by Viśvāmitra. But the celebrated commentator Durgācārya says in the same context: tathā ca parityāgo'pi dr̥ṣṭaḥ yathā Viśvāmitreṇa Madhucchanda ādinām/⁵⁰ Evidently, Durga is led by the version of the Rāmāyaṇa, according to which the sons of Viśvāmitra became as recalcitrant as the command itself was ruinous, the command being that all of them should offer themselves as victims at Ambariṣa's sacrifice for the sake of Śunaśśepa. They were cursed and abandoned.⁵¹

Under Nirukta II 13 relating to the synonyms of the sun and the sky, Yāska says—

Athāpi Varuṇasyaikasya / 'āthā vayām Āditya vraté tavā'. This is the third line of the famous Varuṇa prayer "Uduttamam" (RV 1.24.15) already considered in the previous pages. Both commentators Skanda-Maheśvara (joint authors) and Durga explain the full text of the verse referring to the fact of Śunaśśepa pronouncing it at the sacrifice. Skanda-Maheśvara, however, add an alternative comment on behalf of the etymologists (nairuktapakṣe tu), which purports to the philosophic implications of the stanza.⁵² It implores Varuṇa to liberate one from the bonds of sin committed in the three stages of life, boyhood, manhood and oldage. This is significant if it is supported by tradition, without depending upon mere fancy, for the AB has put the mantra into the mouth of the victim Śunaśśepa.

49. Skandaswāmīn and Maheśvara on the Nirukta Ed. L. Sarup Vol. II (1931), p. 128, also fn. 16 on the same page.

50. Bombay Venkatesvara Press Edn. p. 180 (1912). Sarup's, quoted above, p. 84 'Śunaśśepo yūpe baddho Varuṇam āha,' whereas Durga: 'anayā triṣṭubhā upākṛtā Śunaśśepo Varuṇam stutavān,' which is incorrect according to AB. Skanda is accurate.

51. cf. Keith's remarks: RV Br. Tr. (HOS. 25) p. 64 f. and p. 307. Rāmāyaṇa 1.62.10, 11.

52. Ibid. Sarup, p. 84.

(2) The Bṛhaddevatā

The Bṛhaddevatā does not contribute much to the historical study of the legend. Thrice, in different contexts, the name of Śunaśśepa occurs in the text, twice in the introductory portion and once while describing the gods of the Ṛgveda (1.24-30).

- (a) Namaskāraś Śunaśśepe namaste astu Vidyute / (Saṅkalpayannidam tulyo'ham syāmiti yaducyete) // BD 1.54.

The author is illustrating several technical expressions⁵³ like stuti, praśamsā, nindā, samśaya etc. and among them namaskāra and saṅkalpa. These latter are defined and examples given in this stanza. Namaskāra or homage is illustrated in the Śunaśśepa formula i.e. 1.27.13.

Nāmo mahādbyho nāmo arbhakébhyo nāmo yúvabhyo nāma āśinébhyaḥ / yājāma devān yādī śaknāvāma mā jyayāsaś śamsamā vṛkṣi devāḥ //⁵⁴

- (b) The second reference is in connection with the order of words, which should be understood according to sense :

Śunaśśepam narāśamsam dyāvā naḥ pṛthivī ca /
Niraskṛteti prabhṛtiṣvarthādāsīt kramo yathā //⁵⁵

In the Saṁhitā sometimes these words are used differently e.g. Śunaśś cicchepam (5.2.7), narā vā śamsam (10.64.3), dyāvā naḥ pṛthivī ca (2.41.20) should be read as Śunaśśepam cit, dyāvā-pṛthivī naḥ, etc. The proper order of words in such cases should be determined by the sense conveyed by the context.

- (c) When enumerating the deities of the Śunaśśepa hymns so-called, BD says—

Stūyamānaś śaśvad iti pritas tu manasā dadau/
Śunaśśepāya divyam tu ratham sarvam hiraṇmayam // BD 3.103.

“ Being praised with the stanza ‘ Śaśvad Indraḥ ’ (RV 1.30.16), Indra, pleased at heart, bestowed upon Śunaśśepa a celestial chariot all made of gold.”

Here probably Śunaśśepa the Seer is meant and not the poor victim of Hariścandra's sacrifice. Yāska does not give more details of the legend except the slender thread pointing to Śunaśśepa's being sold for price.

Śaunaka, author of the Bṛhaddevatā, follows his example and refers only to Indra's gift of the golden chariot to Śunaśśepa, which need not necessarily be on the occasion of his life's ordeal.⁵⁶ If the incident really belonged to the famous sacrifice, Indra, who was manasā pritaḥ, should have ordered his release at once. It is not advisable to hypothesize, but, may it be that Yaska and Śaunaka, both of them accredited exponents of the Veda, did not much regard the colourful tapestry of the Aitareya? After all, the legend was the outcome of the Yājñika School; the Nairuktas had their own opinions in the matter.

53. BD 1.33-40.

54. A very popular mantra used on all occasions of addressing an assembly at domestic functions. Śunaśśepa, bound to the stakes, is believed to address the Viśvedevas with this stanza (AB).

55. BD 2.115.

(3) The Sarvānukramaṇi of Kātyāyana

This work affords good support to the Aitareya version. Śunaśśepa is here described as the son of Ajigarta and the adopted son of Viśvāmītra, being given by the gods, ājigartiḥ Śunaśśepaḥ sa kṛtrimo Vaiśvāmītro devarātaḥ.⁵⁷ Hariścandra's concern in the affair is dubious. Kātyāyana, while indexing RV 1.28, says: Yatra grāvā nava śalanuṣṭubādi yaccedhy aulūkhalyau pare mausalyau ca prajāpater Hariścandrasyāntyā carmapraśamsā vā/⁵⁸ The idea is that the last verse is of Hariścandra i.e. he is the deity thereof. The BD has Soma instead.⁵⁹ But Devatānukramaṇi states that the last verse praises Prajāpati Hariścandra or the carma: 'Prajāpatim Hariścandram carma yāntyā praśamsati.'⁶⁰ AB however contemplates it to be a praise of Soma. Who is this Hariścandra? Considering the meaning of the verse,

Take out the remaining Soma-juice from the tray, pour it on the strainer and collect the same in the cow's hide.⁶¹

it is difficult to see which Hariścandra is to be connected with it. Lacking in relevancy, it matters little whether it is Hariścandra the sacrificing king or Prajāpati himself with the name Hariścandra. The verse is in the form of instruction from one priest to another priest or an assistant; and it seems perfectly natural for Śunaśśepa to say it after he had pressed the Soma in a novel but quick process (aṇjassava). According to the accepted principle 'liṅgoktadevatā,' Soma must be the deity. Whatever it is, it should be noted that so far as the development of the story is concerned, the Sarvānukramaṇi has yielded to the Hariścandra complex and admitted him into the legend's orbit.

(4) Vāsiṣṭha Dharmaśāstra

This work⁶² which is stated to be one of the four most ancient works on Hindu Law includes Śunaśśepa among the various kinds of sons. They are classified 56. This observation is happily supported by Śaṅkara. Ref. Sarvā. P. 83 v. 14, please see infra n. 69.

57. Macdonell, Sarvā pp. 6-7.

58. Ibid.

59. BD 3.101 and M's notes.

60. Quotation by Śaṅkara. Sarvā p.87, cf. commentator's remarks.

61. RV 1.28.9. Ūcheṣṭām camvor bhara sōmam pavitra ā srja / Nidhehi gōrādhi tvae /

62. Ed. A. A. Führer, Bombay Sanskrit Series XXIII (1930) p. 50 Mm. P. V. Kane assigns the work tentatively to a period between 300 and 100 B.C. He opines further that it is later than Gautama, Āpastamba and Baudhāyana. See History of Dharmaśāstra, Vol. I, BORI, 1930, p.59.

into twelve,⁶³ six of whom are entitled to inheritance and the other six not entitled. Among the latter category, Śunaśśepa is mentioned as an instance of two kinds viz. kṛita and svayamupāgata: a son who is bought for price and 'a son who approaches by himself'.

“athādāyādabandhūnām sahoḍha eva prathamah / yā garbhīṇī samskriyate sahoḍhaḥ putro bhavati / dattako dvitīyaḥ / yam mātāpitarau dadyātām / kṛitas tṛtīyaḥ / tacchunaśśepena vyākhyātam / svayamupāgataś caturthaḥ / tacchunaśśepena vyākhyātam /

Śunaśśepo vai yūpe niyukto devatās tuṣṭāva / tasyeha devatāḥ pāśam mumucus tam ṛtvija ūcuḥ / mamaivāyam putro'stviti tām ha na sampade / te sampādayāmāsuḥ / eṣa eva yam kāmayet tasya putro'stviti / tasya ha Viśvāmītro hotāsit tasya putratvam iyāyā //

According to AB, as soon as the añjassava is over, Śunaśśepa himself goes and sits on the lap of Viśvāmītra as son. There is no reference to the discussion among the ṛtviks themselves to have him as son each for himself, though Sāyaṇa amplifies the situation with this explanation. When Ajigarta began to press his son to come back, Viśvāmītra of course invites him to join his family only. It is not incorrect to call Śunaśśepa as a svayamupāgata son. Though Vasiṣṭha's Law did not entitle the son for any inheritance, he being an adāyādabandhu, Viśvāmītra out of sweet will and special favour conferred upon Śunaśśepa his entire property, earthly and divine. Was not Vasiṣṭha, the author of this code, a friend of Viśvāmītra? We shall deal with this problem in the next chapter.

V

LATER EXPONENTS OF THE VEDA

(1) Śaḍguruśiṣya

Śaḍguruśiṣya who wrote and finished his commentary on Kātyāyana's Sarvānukramaṇī in 1187 A.D.⁶⁴ closely follows the Aitareya version of the Legend. Inspired with its workmanship, Śaḍguruśiṣya all at once got into a poetical vein and narrated the story in the form of verse;⁶⁵ it is a small canto of 22 stanzas. A few minor differences are inevitable in the relay. Seeing Ajigarta desirous of killing him, Śunaśśepa addressed him 'wait, I shall hasten to the gods (for protection)'—

Yūpe baddhaḥ Śunaśśepo jighāmsuṃ pitaram tataḥ /
ūce tiṣṭhāham evānyā upadhāvāmi devatāḥ //⁶⁶

In the Aitareya, Śunaśśepa never addresses him. He saw him coming with the knife and, in consternation that they would actually cut him up, soliloquises

63. Dvādaśa ityeva putrāḥ purāṇadr̥ṣṭāḥ / They are svayamutpādita, kṣetraja, putrikā paunarbhava, kāṇina, gūḍhotpanna, sahoḍha, dattaka, kṛita, svayamupāgata, apaviddha, and sūdrāputra. Ibid. pp. 49-50.

64. Macdonell's preface to Sarvā p. v.

65. Ibid. p. xx.

66. Sarvā, p. 85 verse 12.

'hantāham devatā upadhāvāmi'⁶⁷ —alas, I shall hasten to the gods. Ajigrata must have looked a veritable fiend and it is not unnatural that Śunaśśepa must have at once screamed 'stop'!

Another departure, which is an improvement on the original is that he prayed, in the course of his appeal to the gods, to Indra, as well, who had already become his patron by bestowing a golden chariot upon him, well pleased with his praise—

Indram ca pūrvavyāpārasamprāptastutisupriyam /
Hiraṇmayarathasyāpi svasmai dātāram eva ca//⁶⁸

This makes it clear that the gift of the golden chariot was an earlier event. An apparent incongruity is removed by this view, because when Śunaśśepa was begging for his life the giving of a chariot—may be of gold—is but a travesty of his exalted position. This we have pointed out in the last section.⁶⁹ Secondly, it reveals that Śunaśśepa was himself a Ṛṣi and a favourite singer, a fact which lends support to the hypothesis that all the series of 7 hymns attributed to him were irrelevant for the occasion and that it was the handiwork of the Aitareya to weave them all into a web to suit its own purpose.

(2) Sāyaṇa

Though so much was written by Sāyaṇa in the shape of commentary to the hymns of the Veda, as well as to the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa, he has not said anything which would contribute to the historical study of the legend. In the RV, rather contrary to his wont, he does not even narrate the story in his own words. He adheres to the task of quoting his authorities, chief of whom is Kātyāyana, while introducing every sūkta and also specific verses when necessary. In this case, he quotes from the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa also, a work on which he wrote his own commentary. When the authorities differed from one another, he faithfully reproduces all of them : e.g. the discussion⁷⁰ about the devatā of RV 1.28.9, wherein he quotes all the sources.

"ucchiṣṭam ityasyāḥ Hariścandrādhiṣavapacarmasomānām anyatamo devatā."

It may be remembered that the Bṛhaddevatā provided the alternative between adhiṣavapacarma and soma ; whereas the Sarvānukramaṇī following the Devatānukramaṇī considered Hariścandra as the deity. The best thing for Sāyaṇa was of course to record all the evidence and leave it at that which he has done.

(3) Dyā Dviveda

Dyā Dviveda's Nītimañjarī (written 1494 A.D.) is only a replica of the picture given by the older authors, in this case, Kātyāyana, Ṣaḍguruśiṣya and Sāyaṇa.

67. AB 7.16.

68. Sarvā, p. 85 verse 14.

69. Supra n. 56.

70. Supra p.

From the first-mentioned authority the author quotes the index ; from the second, the poetical narrative, and from the third the explanation of the R̥gvedic mantras.⁷¹

The main purpose of Dyā is however to illustrate certain ethical maxims from the Vedic events. It was elsewhere observed that our author has not performed well in that respect. His dicta are unimpressive and his examples open to question. Śunaśśepa provides the ground for this observation : Pitarau vandyau ityāha—

Pitarau hi sadā vandyau na tyajed aparādhinau /
Pitrā baddhaḥ Śunaśśepo yayāce pitṛdarśanam //⁷²

‘Parents always deserve respect ; they should not be forsaken though guilty. Bound by the very father, Śunaśśepa begged for a sight of the father (parents).’

The R̥gvedic verse quoted in support is the famous ‘kaśya nūnām’ (I.24.1) which ends with ‘pitāram ca dr̥śyam mātāram ca,’ which is the refrain of the next verse also. Enough has been said above to show at once that such moralisations do not at all appeal. In the present case, the interpretation of the last line of the R̥gvedic verse just quoted, as conceived by Dyā is far from convincing. In fact, it is wrong ; Śunaśśepa could not and did not wish to see once again the parents who gave him birth. He was longing, on the other hand, to find on this earth, real affectionate parents. He found them, indeed, in Viśvāmitra.

Another lesson. Devānām api stutiḥ priyetyāha—

Aśvavyaparipūrṇo’pi dadyāt stutyāpi cepsitam /
Śunaśśepāya sauvarṇam ratham Indraḥ stuto dadau //⁷³

‘A man endowed with riches, being praised, should give what is desired ; Indra, being praised, gave a golden chariot to Śunaśśepa’.

The moral, unfortunately, is not couched in clear terms. The versification reminds one of the proverbial versifiers of Bhoja’s Court.⁷⁴ Suffice it to say, that both the lesson and the example lack the pithiness or the ‘sting’, which is the very soul of an epigram.

Before concluding this section, it must be observed, with a sense of surprise also that these veteran writers have not been drawn away by the Epic and Purāṇic versions of the legend. Their business was however specific, that is only to explain a given text. It is perfectly tactful and necessary for the commentator to confine himself to his province. But how could the great epics, specially the Rāmāyaṇa (which gives a different version of the story), and the Purāṇas like the Bhāgavata withhold their influence on these learned savants ? They were able to visualise a discipline which was more than fifteen centuries old in their time. The Epics

71. He has mentioned other authorities as well viz. Āśvalāyana ŚS., the R̥g-vidhāna etc. They are commonplace.

72. Nītimañjarī (Benares Edition) p. 20. v. 11.

73. Ibid. p. 24 V. 12. The R̥gvedic verse in support is I.20.16.

74. Bhojanam dehi rājendra ghṛtasūpasamanvitam / (Kālidāsa concluded the labours of these born poets !) Māhiṣam ca śaraccandracandrikādhavalam dadhī //.

and Purāṇas surely belonged to later periods, perhaps the early centuries of the Christian era. And seeing the other end of knowledge which was fourteen-fold (caturdaśa vidyāh) was every man's goal in those times. The matter deserves some thought.

VI

RĀMĀYAṆA

The Rāmāyaṇa⁷⁵ records the Śunaśśeṇa legend in a very different form. The story is related by the sage Śatānanda, son of Gautama, to Śrī Rāma at a sacrifice which king Janaka was celebrating at Mithilā and to which Viśvāmitra took Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa to witness the great occasion. The guests were accorded a most respectful welcome by the King. After exchanging courtesies, Janaka's principal priest Śatānanda was pleased to hear of Rāma's visit to the hermitage of his revered father Gautama and of the redemption of the mother, Ahalyā who was under a curse. This happy event was due to the favour of Viśvāmitra who brought Rāma along. Naturally Śatānanda was overwhelmed with affection and regard for the young prince and a sense of gratitude to Viśvāmitra, the universal friend. This prompted him to recount all the great deeds of Viśvāmitra before the Prince, who listened with wonder and admiration. Śunaśśeṇa's deliverance was one of the series.

Once upon a time Viśvāmitra was practising severe penance at the Puṣkara in the western regions of our country. At the same time king Ambariṣa of Ayodhyā started a sacrifice. The victim (paśu) was carried away by Indra, causing a serious breach in the performance. The priest accused the king of carelessness and, in atonement, proposed that either the stolen victim should be recovered or a human victim secured instead. The king made an elaborate search all over the country, towns and forests and even the holy hermitages. He was prepared to buy a human being paying a huge ransom, if such should be available. At length on the heights of the Bhṛgu mountain, he met the great sage Ṛṣiḥ seated with his wife and sons. He applied to him for one of his sons in lieu of a hundred thousand kine. The father said he was unwilling to part with the eldest son and the mother declined to let go the youngest, her darling Śunaka. Thereupon, Śunaśśeṇa, the middle one, himself said 'Father says the eldest is not for sale, and mother says the youngest is not for sale; the middle one is meant for sale, I think. So, Prince, take me'. Ambariṣa was delighted, gave away crores of gold and heaps of precious stones, along with a hundred thousand kine, and went away with Śunaśśeṇa mounted on his chariot.⁷⁶

75. Rāmāyaṇa of Vālmīki. Edition—Nirṇayāṅgana Press, Bombay, with Commentary Tilaka (1930).

76. Here ends canto 61, from which relevant portions are quoted hereunder :

Etasmīnneva kāle tu Ayodhyādhīpatī mahān
Ambariṣa iti khyāto yaṣṭum sanupacakrame / 5
Tasya vai yajamānasya paśum Indro jahāra ha
Prapaṣṭe tu paśau vipre rājānam idam abravīt / 6

At noon, the party halted at the Puṣkara for rest. There Śunaśśepa saw his maternal uncle Viśvāmitra engaged in penance, along with other sages. With sorrowful face, thirsty and exhausted, he fell at the sage's feet and appealed for succour in pathetic terms. Consoling him in so many words, the great sage Viśvāmitra, an ocean of kindness, commanded his sons to offer themselves as victims at king Ambariṣa's sacrifice instead of Śunaśśepa. Then the sons, Madhucchandas and others retorted "How do you forsake, O Sire, your own sons to save another man's son? We think it is improper like dog's flesh in the dish." Furious at this disobedient reply, Viśvāmitra cursed the sons for a thousand years of life on earth eating dog's flesh like the sons of Vasiṣṭha. Turning round to the pitiful Śunaśśepa, he instructed him "When you are bound to the holy yūpa by means of thread after being decked with red garlands and unguents, just address Agni and sing two songs (gāthās). You will succeed." He taught him the gāthās. Śunaśśepa having learnt them with due attention went pleased and urged Ambariṣa to resume the journey. So they reached the capital. With the consent of the

Paśor abhyāhṛto rājan prapaṣṭas tava durnayāt
Arakṣitāraṃ rājānam ghnanti doṣā nareśvara / 7
Prāyaścittam mahaddhyetan naram vā puruṣarābhā
Anayasva paśum śighram yāvat karma pravartate / 8
Upādhyāyavacaś śrutvā sa rājā puruṣarābhā
Anviyeṣa mahābuddhiḥ paśum gobhīs sahasraśaḥ / 9
Deśān janapadāns tāms tān nagarāpi vanāni ca
Āśramāni ca puṇyāni mārgamāṇo mahīpatih / 10
Sa putrasahitam tāta sabhāryam Raghunandana
Bhṛgutuṅge samāśinam Ṛṣikam sandadarśa ha / 11
Tam uvāca mahātejāḥ prapamyaḥbhīprasāḍya ca
Maharṣim tapasā dīptam rājarsir amitaprabhā / 12
Prṣṭvā sarvatra kuśalam Ṛṣikam tam idam vacaḥ
Gavām śatasahasreṇa vikrīṇṣe sutam yadi / 13
Paśor arthe mahābhūgaṃ kṛtakṛtyo'smi Bhārgava
Sarve parigatā deśā yajñīyam na labhe paśum / 14
Dātum arhasi mūlyena sutam ekam ito mama
Evam ukto mahātejā Ṛṣikas tvabravid vacaḥ / 15
Nāham jyeṣṭham naraśreṣṭha vikrīṇyām kathāficata
Ṛṣikasya vacaś śrutvā teṣāṃ mātā mahātmanām / 16
Uvāca naraśārdūlam Ambariṣam idam vacaḥ
Avikreyam sutam jyeṣṭham bhagavān āha bhārgavaḥ / 17
Mamāpi dayitam viddhi kaniṣṭham Śunakam prabho
Tasmāt kanyasam putram na dāsyē tava pārthiva / 18
Prāyeṇa hi naraśreṣṭha jyeṣṭhāḥ pītṛsu vallabhāḥ
Mātṛnām ca kanyāṃsas tasmād rakṣye kanyasam / 19
Uktavākye munau tasmān munīpatnyām tathāiva ca
Śunaśśepas svayam Rāma madhyamō vākyam abravīt / 20
Pitā jyeṣṭham avikreyam mātā cāha kanyasam
Vikreṇām madhyamam manye rājaputra nayasva mām / 21
Atha rājā mahābāhur vākyānte brahminavādināḥ
Hiranyasya suvarṇasya koṭibhi ratnarāśībhiḥ / 22
Gavām śatasahasreṇa Śunaśśepam nareśvaraḥ
Gṛhītṛvā paramaprito jagāma Raghunandana / 23
Ambariṣas tu rājarsī ratham āropya satvaraḥ Śunaśśepam mahātejā jagāmāsu mahāyasaḥ / 24 members of the sacrificial Sadas, the victim was purified, adorned with red cloth and tied to the post. Thus bound, Śunaśśepa praised in exquisite terms the two gods Indra and his brother (Viṣṇu) as already instructed. The thousand-eyed one was pleased with this intimate appeal and granted him long life. The sacrifice was duly concluded and king Ambariṣa derived manifold benefit by the grace of Indra. And Viśvāmitra continued his penance at the Puṣkara for ten hundred years.

Thus we see that the Rāmāyaṇa appears to represent a tradition which differs much from the Aitareya. Whereas in the latter, king Hariścandra, on account of his son Rohita, tried to sacrifice in order to appease Varuṇa's anger, Śunaśśepa son of Ajigarta, here in the Rāmāyaṇa king Ambariṣa, on account of the sacrificial victim being stolen by Indra, tries to sacrifice, in general propitiation of the gods, Śunaśśepa, son of Rciḱa. In the one, Viśvāmitra is not related to Śunaśśepa and

Canto 62

Śunaśśepam naraśreṣṭha gṛhītvā tu mahāyasaḥ
 Vyaśramat Puṣkare rājā madhyāhne Raghunandana / 1
 Tasya viśramamāṇasya Śunaśśepo mahāyasaḥ
 Puṣkaram jyeṣṭham āgamyā Viśvāmitram dadarśa ha / 2
 Tapyantam ṛṣibhis sārddham mātulam paramāturaḥ
 Viśaṇṇaradano dīnas tṛṣṇayā ca śrameṇa ca / 3
 Papātāṅke mune Rāma vākyam cedam uvāca ha
 Na me'sti mātā na pitā jñātayo bāndhavāḥ kutaḥ / 4
 Trātum arhasi mām saumya dharmeṇa munipuṅgava
 Trātā tvam hi naraśreṣṭha sarveṣām tvam hi bhāvanah / 5
 Rājā ca kṛtakāryas syād aham dīrghāyur avyayaḥ
 Svargalokam upāśniyām tapas taptvā hyanuttamam / 6
 Sa me nātho hyanāthasya bhava bhavyena cetasā
 Piteva putram dharmātman trātum arhasi kṛbiṣāt / 7
 Tasya tadvacanam śrutvā Viśvāmitro mahātapaḥ
 Sāntvayitvā bahuvīdham putrān idam uvāca ha / 8
 Yatkṛte pitarah putrān janayanti subhārthinaḥ
 Paralokalitārthāya tasya kāloyam āgataḥ / 9
 Ayam munisuto bālo mattaḥ śarapam icchati
 Asya jīvitaṃ mātreṇa priyam kuruta putrakāḥ / 10
 Sarve sukṛtakarmāṇaḥ sarve dharmaparāyaṇāḥ
 Paśubhūtā narendrasya tṛptim agneḥ prayacchata / 11
 Nāthavamsā ca Śunaśśepo yajñaś cāvighnato bhavet
 Devatās tarpitās ca syur mama cāpi kṛtam vacaḥ / 12
 Munes tad vacanam śrutvā Madhucchandādayas sūtāḥ
 Sābhīmānam naraśreṣṭha salilam idam abruvan / 13
 Katham ātmasutān hitvā trāyase 'nyasutam vibho
 Akāryam iva paśyāmaḥ śvamāmsam iva bhojane / 14
 Teṣām tad vacanam śrutvā putrāṇām munipuṅgavaḥ
 Krodhasamraktanayano vyāhartum upacakrame / 15
 Nissādhvasam idam proktam dharmādapi vigarhitam
 Atikramya tu madvākyam dāruṇam romaharṣanam / 16
 Śvamāmsabhojinā sarve Vāsisthā iva jātiṣu
 Pūrṇam varṣasahasram tu prthivyām anuvatsyatha / 17
 Kṛtvā śāpasamāyuktān putrān munivaraś tadā Śunaśśepam uvācārtam kṛtvā rakṣām nīramayām / 18 comes on the scene only at the sacrifice as one of the officiating priests: in the other, Viśvāmitra is the maternal uncle of Śunaśśepa and enters the story even before the sacrifice but does not attend it; he also teaches him two gāthās whose recitation at the proper time will prevent his death. The revolt and degradation of the sons also precede the sacrifice in the Rāmāyaṇa, while the same occurred after in the Aitareya. Of 101 sons, 51 of whom Madhucchandas was leader, obeyed the father's command to accept Śunaśśepa's primogeniture. But in the Rāmāyaṇa all the sons,⁷⁷ even the good Madhucchandas were concerned in the revolt and its consequences; and what was the command which was disobeyed? It was that in order to save one soul i.e. Śunaśśepa's, all the sons should offer themselves as victims at the sacrifice. Ajigarta sold Śunaśśepa, as he was driven to the pitch by his indigence, but Ṛeika seems to have had enough and to spare, he must have made up his mind to spare a son also out of deference to the wishes of the great king who came to the door for help. The Aitareya depicts Śunaśśepa as the god-given son of Viśvāmitra, who adopted him into his family, formally also giving him the privileges of the first born. We saw how this fitted into the Vedic tradition in a wider application of the term. The Rāmāyaṇa provides no indication of what happened to Śunaśśepa afterwards. Perhaps he went to penance as he expressed himself when he sought Viśvāmitra's help (I.62.6).

This section cannot be concluded without referring to some far-reaching differences in reading—and therefore, in import—between the Bombay edition of the Rāmāyaṇa and that brought out by the Italian scholar G. Gorresio in 1843-67 (Bengal Recension).

Pavītrapāśair ābaddho raktamālyānulepanaḥ
 Vaiṣṇavam yūpam āśādyā vāgbhīr agnim udāhara / 10
 Ime ca gāthe dve divye gāyethā muniputraka
 Ambarīṣasya yajñe'smin tatas siddhim avāpsyasi / 20
 Śunaśśepo grhītvā te dve gāthe susamāhitāḥ
 Tvarayā rājasimham tam Ambarīṣam uvāca ha / 21
 Rājasimha mahābuddhe śighram gacchāvahe vayam
 Nivartayaśva rājendra dīkṣām ca samudāhara / 22
 Tadvākyaṃ pūputrasya śrutvā harṣasamanvitāḥ
 Jagāma nripatis śighram yajñāvāṇam atandritāḥ / 23
 Sadasyānumate rājā pavitrakṛtalakṣaṇam
 Paśum raktāmbaram kṛtvā yūpe tam samabandhayat / 24
 Sa baddho vāgbhīr agryābhīr abhīstajāva vai surau
 Indram Indrānujam caiva yathāvan muniputrakah / 25
 Tataḥ prītas sahasrākṣo rahasyastutītositāḥ
 Dīgham āyus tadā prādāt Śunaśśepāya vāsavaḥ / 26
 Sa ca rājā naraśreṣṭha yajñasya ca samāptavān
 Phalam bahugunam Rāma sahasrākṣaprasādajam / 27
 Viśvāmitro'pi dharmātmnā bhūyas tepe mahātapaḥ
 Puṣkareṣu naraśreṣṭhu daśavarṣakātāni ca / 28

77. Compare Keith's remarks on p. 64 of his Rig-Veda Brāhmaṇas Translated (HOS Vol. 25, 1920). He says if the gāthās introduced by the AB are taken by themselves there is no question of division among the sons. The division into first fifty as one group and the second fifty with the midmost Madhucchandas as leader of the other group is, in his opinion, perhaps, the handiwork of the Aitareya. There is some sense in this, at any rate, because Madhucchandas of Rgvedic fame is exonerated.

(a) It is said that Ambarīṣa was out to perform a human sacrifice and Indra carried away the victim :

“Tasya vai yaṇmānasya naramedhena bhūpateḥ Prokṣitam mantravad yūpāt paśuṃ Indro jahāra tam / ”
1.63.6⁷⁸

The Bombay edition does not specify which paśu it was, but the priest says ‘Search for the stolen paśu or bring a human victim instead’. (See Com. Tilaka on this portion).⁷⁹

(b) Ambarīṣa finds Ṛcika with his many sons, residing in a homestead, but poor :

“Anveṣamānas so’paśyat Ṛcikam nāma Rāghava Bahuputram daridram ea dvijaṃ gṛhanivāsinam ” /
Ibid. 12.

But our Ṛcika is a maharṣi, dazzling with penance, accompanied by wife and sons on the heights of the Bhṛgu mountain (1.61.11,12 text quoted above in a footnote).

(c) The revolt of the sons is expressed in different terms :

“Katham ātmasutān hitvā trātā parasutān asi Bhagavan kāryametat te svamāmsasyeva bhakṣaṇam ” /
1.64.14

The difference is only between sva-māmsa and śva-māmsa ! It is just possible that śva-māmsa ‘dog’s flesh’ is meant, not ‘own (sva) flesh’. The confusion between s and ś in Bengali pronunciation is understandable. Cf. śāntvayitvā for sāntvayitvā. The Vāsiṣṭhas were cursed to eat dog’s flesh. There also Gorresio reads as svamāmsa.⁸⁰ The degradation was, from Vedic times, attached to eating dog’s flesh. The great sage Vāmadeva famished by hunger cooked the entrails of a dog.⁸¹ It is common parlance to call a shabby fellow as śvapaca. In the Purāṇas we meet with references which say that in times of famine the condition of some of these sages was so straitened that the whole family subsisted on dog’s flesh :⁸² The matter did not call for such discussion had not the alternative been most tragic and verily, unthinkable—eating one’s own flesh and yet living !⁸³

78. The two cantos here are 63 and 64, whereas in the Bombay Edition, they are 61 and 62. Verbal differences in reading are numerous, but only those that indicate a factual change have been considered. The first kāṇḍa is called Ādikāṇḍa whereas we are familiar with the name Bālakāṇḍa. Gorresio spells Śunaśsepa with a pha.

79. Abhyāhrta idānīm asmābhūṛ śāntaḥ paśus tava durmayāt tvaṭpāpavaśāt tāvakarakṣiṇām pramādāt ea prapaṣṭu ityanvayaḥ / Tilaka com. on Rāmāyaṇa 1.61.7 (Bombay).

80. Gorresio 1.61.20, 64.16-17.

81. RV 4.18.13.

82. cf. Mbh. Śānti. 5380 ff. quoted by Muir OST I p. 373 f.

83. But compare Rām 7.77-78 (Bombay, 1930) about the god (Śveta) who was cursed to eat his own flesh.

(d) Viśvāmitra imparts to Śunaśśepa a mantra, praising Indra, which he should mutter when sprinkled with holy water, before the actual sacrifice :

“Yadā paśutve putra tvam proksitaḥ syās tadā japeḥ Imam mantram mayā proktam Indrābhiṣṭavasamyutam ” /
Ibid. 19.

Later,

Sa baddha ṛgbhis tuṣṭāva devendram harivāhanam
Bhāgārthinam anuprāptam svareṇocair vinādayan /
Ibid. 25.

Śunaśśepa praised Indra with verses from the R̥gveda. According to our text, Viśvāmitra provided rakṣā first i.e. by chanting some spells and then taught him two gāthās. The instruction was, also, that he should first address himself to Agni, which fact peculiarly corresponds with the Vedic version. First he ran to Prajāpati (ka) and then to Agni, later on to Indra.^{83A} Varuṇa the real god concerned is neglected by either version. Some scholars⁸⁴ attach much importance that, according to Gorresio, Viśvāmitra taught Śunaśśepa only one mantra, whereas in the Bombay book it is two gāthās. It is not necessarily one stanza only, because, later in the same text, the reference is amplified as ‘ṛgbhis tuṣṭāva’ i.e. praised with several verses from the R̥gveda. The same may apply to the two gāthās. Let us remember that the AB puts 97 verses into the victim’s mouth and make him knock at the door of this, that and every god !

VII

MAHĀBHĀRATA

(1) The Anuśāsana-parva of the Mahābhārata describes the exploits of Viśvāmitra in these words : deliverance of Śunaśśepa was, of course, one of them—

Reikasyātmajaś caiva Śunaśśepo mahātapāḥ
Vimokṣito mahāsatrāt paśutām apyupāgataḥ /
Hariścandrakratau devāms toṣayitvātmatejasā
Putratām anusamprāpto Viśvāmitrasya dhīmataḥ /
Nābhivādayate jyeṣṭham Devarātam narādhipa
Putrāḥ pañcāśad evāpi śaptāḥ śvapacatām gatāḥ /⁸⁵

A man of great austerities, Śunaśśepa, son of Reika, was liberated (by Viśvāmitra) from the sacrifice, though bound as the victim. And he, in that sacrifice performed by Hariścandra, pleased the gods by his own brilliance and became the son of the wise Viśvāmitra. But the fifty sons all of them, would not greet Devarāta (Śunaśśepa) as the eldest and, hence, were cursed to the state of cooking dog’s flesh.

83A. AB VII.6, RV 1.24.1 and 2.

84. Festschrift Prof. Kane (1941) p. 306 n. 8 (Mr. H. G. Narahari).

85. Mbh. 13 (Anuśāsana) 3.6-8. Citraśālā Press, Poona 1933, with Commentary Bhārata-bhāvadīpa of Nilakaṇṭha Caturdhara.

This account lands us in some confusion. It is difficult to say which exactly is responsible for this, whether the foregoing story given in the Rām. or the one from the Mbh. just recapitulated. The relative ages of the two epics are admittedly hard to determine. A period covering centuries, during which the epics might have taken their present shape only, has been postulated. Thus, according to Winternitz, "between the 4th century B.C. and the 4th century A.D. the transformation of the epic Mahābhārata into our present compilation took place, probably gradually... Small alterations and additions still continued to be made however even in later centuries. One date of the Mahābhārata does not exist at all, but the date of every part must be determined on its own account."⁸⁶ Concluding the discussion on the age of Rām., Winternitz says: "The whole Rāmāyaṇa, including the later portions was already an old and famous work when the Mahābhārata had not yet attained its present form. It is probable that the Rāmāyaṇa had its present extent and contents as early as towards the close of the 2nd century A.D. The older nucleus of the Mahābhārata, is probably older than the ancient Rāmāyaṇa... It is probable that the original Rāmāyaṇa was composed in the third century B.C. by Vālmiki on the basis of ancient ballads."⁸⁷ What was said of the Mbh., that the date of every part must be determined on its own account, well applies to the Rām. also. For in the first place, the first and the seventh books of the latter viz. the Bāla. and Uttara kāṇḍas respectively are accepted as later additions, and even in the Bāla kāṇḍa, the story of R̥ṣyaśṛṅga, the exploits of Viśvāmitra the account of the dwarf incarnation of Viṣṇu, the descent of the Ganges, the churning of the ocean etc.—are all agglutinative in character. Special care therefore becomes necessary to fix the relative chronology of those legends which are common to both the epics. All theorisations are perforce tentative until critical editions of both works, after the fashion of the BORI Mahābhārata,⁸⁸ are made available. Ignorance, wanton or otherwise, of this important factor would result

86. Winternitz HIL p. 475 (1927).

87. Ibid. pp. 516-517.

88. It is well-known how this stupendous undertaking by the BORI has succeeded in pushing though about half of the Great Epic. The work is published upto the end of Bhīṣma parva. This crowning glory of critical scholarship in India was achieved by the late Dr. Viṣṇu Sitārām Sukthankar, who by dint of vision and dynamic activity enunciated the principles of textual criticism and evolved a perfect process of manuscript collation and editorial collaboration. For full seventeen years he was so deep in the Mbh. which was to him a universe by itself, that he had unconsciously attained sublime identification (Sārūpya) with Mahārṣi Vyāsa when, at the end of his memorable, but, alas, portentous preface, he recalled

Ūrdhvabāhur viraumyeṣa na ca kaś ciecchṛnoti mām
Dharmād arthaś ca kāmāś ca sa kimartham na sevyate //

"Across the reverberating corridors of Time, we, his descendants heard his clarion call to Duty." Such was his realisation:

A critical edition of the Rāmāyaṇa has been promised by Dr. Raghu Vira (p. 390 Sukthankar Memorial Edition, Vol.1, Critical Studies in the Mahābhārata, 1944). When the two critical editions are in hand, a historical and comparative study of the legends will be placed on a secure basis. At present we have to be satisfied with the comparative aspect only not the historical, as far as it is possible.

in very fallacious conclusions. A few instances have been convincingly described by the late Dr. Sukthankar in his Epic Studies VIII which is a text-critical essay on the Rāmopākhyāna, occurring in the Āraṇyaka-parva. Professors Jacobi and Oldenberg have been proved to be victims of hasty generalisations based on passages of uncertain veracity.⁸⁹

In the light of the above remarks, some observations of a purely comparative nature, not stressing on chronological sequence, may be recorded. Taking shelter under Winternitz's conclusion that the present text of the Rām. was a fact at the close of 2nd century A.D., while Mbh. attained that state by the 4th, apart from the immemorial tradition of Rām. being the First Poem (ādikāvya) that was composed, the section on Rām. has been placed earlier.

Now to come back to the story of Śunaśśepa. Śunaśśepa is the son of Reika : this is a point common to both Rām. and Mbh. The sacrifice is undertaken by Hariscandra : this is one with the Aitareya. Viśvāmitra's sons were fifty only and all of them were cursed (Mbh.). Rām. also says similarly though, however, it does not exactly estimate his prolific achievements. AB credits him with a hundred and one, of whom the first fifty were cursed.

It is to be observed that the narration of Viśvāmitra's deeds, which were so many, was the main purpose of the Mbh. context. Therefore the Śunaśśepa incident is given in bare outline. If the poet had entered into details, there should have been a clearer rendering, so that we could discern a harmonious trend.

(2) Harivamśa—This work is regarded as part of the Mahābhārata, but outside the pale of the traditional 18 parvas. It is a kind of appendix (khila or pariśiṣṭa) for the great epic, which was a convenient and accommodating receptacle for all lore of the country. With regard to such works it is not a useful attempt to scrutinize the authenticity or genuineness of this portion or that ; nor is it useful to determine the age or date of their composition. They are intended for the edification of the common folk on whose minds, only the narrated events exert an influence rather than the academic aspects of date and authorship. In such a swollen stream of legendary matter, as the Mahābhārata, currents and cross currents, pools and whirlpools pass muster, and the inquirer runs the risk of being caught and lost amidst them. Here is an example :

The Śunaśśepa story given in the Harivamśa, which is the nineteenth parva so to say, is so incoherent with that told in the Anuśāsana which is the thirteenth parva. Says the *Harivamśa*⁹⁰—

Viśvāmitrātmajānām tu Śunaśśepo'grajaḥ smṛtaḥ /
Bhārgavaḥ Kauśikatvam hi prāptaḥ sa munisattamaḥ /

89. SME Vol. 1, (1944), pp. 338 f, fn. 4 on p. 339.

90. Citraśālā Edn. (Poona) 1.27.54b—58a.

Viśvāmitrasya putras tu Śunaśśepo'bhavat kila /
 Haridaśvasya yajñe tu paśutve viniyojitaḥ /
 Devair dattaḥ sa vai yasmāt Devarātas' tato'bhavat /
 Devarātādayas sapta Viśvāmitrasya vai sutāḥ /
 Dṛṣadvatīsutaś cāpi Viśvāmitrāt tathāṣṭakaḥ /

Among Viśvāmitra's sons, Śunaśśepa is considered as the first-born, and thereby that sage who was a Bhārgava, descended from Bhṛgu, attained the position of a Kauśika. It happened this way that at the sacrifice instituted by Haridaśva,⁹¹ Śunaśśepa had been yoked as a paśu; then he became Viśvāmitra's son, for, the gods (having granted life to the victim) made him over to Viśvāmitra. Hence he got the name Devarāta (god-given). Devarāta and others are seven sons⁹² of Viśvāmitra, and through Dṛṣadvatī also a son called Aṣṭaka.

Śunaśśepa's pedigree is also different, it is an interesting revelation. He was the sage Ṛeika's son all right, and the middle one too, but placed between Jamadagni the elder and Śunaḥpuecha⁹³ the younger brother: The chapter under review gives the whole genealogy, consistent in itself—

King Gādhi gave his daughter Satyavatī in marriage to Ṛeika, son of Bhṛgu. Ṛeika was pleased with his wife and prepared the holy caru for the sake of a son

91. This is neither Hariścandra (AB), nor Ambariṣa (Rām.):

92. Viśvāmitra's sons defy all attempts at enumeration! Book to book the number changes ranging from 7 to 101. In this very chapter (Hari. 1.27) the sum of seven is mentioned but the list comes up in all to 14 at least. That he was a prolific parent is acknowledged everywhere. Mbh. 13.4 counts 62 sons. Nilakaṇṭha on v. 60.

93. No Śuno-lāṅgūla here contrary to AB, where Ś-puecha is the eldest and Ś-lāṅgūla the youngest. See next note.

94. For the genealogy and the following narrative ref. Hari. 1.27. 12-35, and further (41-42 Ibid.)—

Aurvasyānīvam Ṛeikasya Satyavatīyām mahāyaśāḥ /
 Jamadagnis tapovīryāj jaiṇe brahmavidām varāḥ /
 Madhyamaś ca Śunaśśepaḥ Śunaḥpuechaḥ kaṇiṣṭhakaḥ /

to himself and also one to his father-in-law Gādhi on request. Both parts of the caru, he handed to his wife Satyavati pointing out which she should take and which her mother. Somehow at the time of partaking the sacred viands, the mother gave away her portion to the daughter. As Satyavati conceived, Ṛeika, by divine instinct, discovered the mistake. In his dispensation, the caru that was meant for the mother-in-law was to produce a strong and valiant son, invincible and conquering all Kṣatriyas, and that for his wife was to produce a most eminent sage, wise in thought and serene in temperament. That was just right. But fate turned the tables.⁹⁵ Satyavati was sad, because she at all events preferred a saintly son to a redoubtable warrior; such a one was fitting for her father who was a king. Therefore she begged her consort, the sage Ṛeika to change the progeny even then, for what is it that is impossible for a divine sage who can make and unmake things? She proposed an alternative also lest she should offend her revered husband—‘Confer upon me a saintly son only; if inevitable, let his son be of the warrior kind’. Ṛeika was moved by his beloved’s fervent prayer and at once granted it. Thus was born the sage Jamadagni.⁹⁶ As the result of the other portion of the sacred caru, the sage Viśvāmitra was born.⁹⁷ But how to reconcile the legend of Ṛeika having three sons of whom Śunaśśepa was the middle one? The author of the Harivaṃśa, whoever it is, simply appended that series of three brothers to this illustrious Bhṛgu line substituting Jamadagni’s name for the eldest!⁹⁸ We have occasion to say elsewhere that except the name of Śunaśśepa, the series of Śuna-names are spurious. At any rate the latter do not fit in with the context. We may at worst resort to the convenient theory of several persons of the same name. The Ṛeikas are different, the father of a Jamadagni and the brother-in-law of a Viśvāmitra being poles apart from the Ṛeika who sold a son for price.

VIII

PURĀṆAS

(1) Brāhma

This Purāṇa⁹⁹ is always stated first in the list of eighteen mahā-purāṇas and hence sometimes called Ādi-Purāṇa. Looking into the contents, however, it is

95. The story is related in Mbh. 13.4 with slight elaboration here and there. The change of caru was due to the mischief of Satyavati’s mother who did not scruple to play fraud on her own daughter.

96. Ibid. 35

Tataḥ Satyavati putram janayāmāsa Bhārgavam /
Tapasyabhiratam dāntam Jamadagnim śamātmakam /

97. Ibid. 42 f.

Viśvāmitram tu dāyādām Gādhiḥ Kuśikanandanah /
Janayāmāsa putram tu tapovidyāśamātmakam /
Prāpya brahmarṣśamatām yo’yam saptarṣitām gatah /

98. Compare Winternitz’s remarks on p. 443. HIL Vol. I, regarding the genuineness of the work.

99. In this section the Purāṇas are considered in the order in which they are dealt with by Winternitz. HIL p. 531 The earlier Purāṇas must have, according to the Professor, come into being before the 7th century A.D. (p. 525). This always rules out the interpolations which are a menace to a systematic appreciation of the Purāṇas.

revealed that only a very small portion of it could be called ancient. Glorification of several holy places on the Ganges is a special feature of this Purāṇa.

The Śunaśśeṣa legend¹⁰⁰ is described in the Gautamī-māhātmya (chs. 70-175), which is a glorification of the sacred places on the Ganges. Sages Nārada and Parvata once visited the Ikṣvāku king Hariścandra. Wondering as to why all creatures under creation hanker after progeny, the king sought enlightenment at their hands, being himself childless. They replied suitably and advised him : "Go to the sacred Gautamī (holy place) and worship Varuṇa. He will grant your wish." The king obeyed, Varuṇa pleased by his worship, granted his request on condition that he would sacrifice to him the very son that would be born. Hariścandra agreed and returned to the capital. But after the child was actually born, the king was so overwhelmed with paternal love that he, almost in the manner related in AB, put off discharging his duty by the God. At last the young Prince, Rohita, was sixteen and fit to be Crown Prince, when Varuṇa came for the last time and insisted on his due. The king summoned the Prince in the presence of ministers and priests and told him all the history of his birth and the imminent sacrifice. But the youth sharply retorted : "Wait, I shall first sacrifice to Viṣṇu, Lord of the Worlds, with Varuṇa as paśu (victim), the priests shall help me in this."¹⁰¹ Varuṇa was enraged and cursed the king with dropsy. Rohita went to the forest; five years elapsed and during the sixth, Rohita came to the same holy spot on the Ganges where his father had worshipped Varuṇa. There he met Ajigarta, son of sage Vayas,¹⁰² followed by wife and three sons. Getting acquainted with him in a casual manner, he bargained for Śunaśśeṣa in lieu of a thousand cows, besides grain, gold and cloth. Rohita then went to the father and told him to offer to Varuṇa the sage's son who was bought for price. Then, what is strange, Hariścandra refused to sacrifice the brāhmaṇa : "Having made them (Brāhmaṇas) victims, I am not anxious to live a pitiful life. It is not fair, death is preferable to making the twice-born a sacrificial victim. Go therefore, my son, happily with the Brāhmaṇa." At this time was heard the Voice from Heaven : "O king of kings go to the sacred Gautamī with Rohita, the priests and with the son of the Brāhmaṇa. There celebrate the sacrifice without killing Śunaśśeṣa, and the sacrifice will still be complete."

100. Brahma-Purāṇa. AnSS. No. 28 (1895) ch. 104 (pp. 246-295) and ch. 150 (p. 361 f.)

101. Rohita uvāca—Aham pūrvam mahārāja rtvigbhis sapurohitaḥ / Viṣṇave lokanāthāya yakṣye'ham tvaritam śuciḥ / Paśunā Varunenātha tad anujāatam arhasi / Ibid. Ch. 104 st. 38. The sarcasm behind 'paśunā' is irresistible!

102. 'Rṣes tu Vayasah sutam'. According to Vedic texts he is 'Suyavasi' i.e. son of Suyavas. How patent the error in text-transmission or of legendary tradition! It could easily be 'Rṣes suyavasas sutam'. No. v.l. for the Purāṇa reading. But a later chapter (150) has 'Suyavasyātmajo loke' jigartiriti viśrutah; the line may point to the name being 'Suyavasya' taking the whole as a compound. There is a v.l. 'suyajñasyātmajo' in this context. Illustrative of Purāṇic license if not vagary is that the name Ajigarta is here Ajigartī twice after final e and o (Sk. 86) with initial a elided, and finally (four times) as simply Jigarti, the initial a being dropped perhaps on the analogy of Bhāguri's Law.

Then the king repaired to the banks of the Ganges with the priest Vasistha, the sages Viśvāmitra and Vāmadeva. The sacrifice was performed in regular manner. At the proper time, Viśvāmitra addressed the Assembly and the Gods. "Pray, permit all of you, the gods severally to whom he as oblation is due (to be sacrificed),—permit this Śunaśśepa (to be free). Foremost of the Vipras, may he bathe in the sacred Gautamī and offer prayer to the gods, whereby they shall be pleased." With the approval of the assembly, Śunaśśepa bathed in the sacred river and praised the gods who declared: "This sacrifice is complete without killing Śunaśśepa." (kratuḥ pūrṇo bhavatyēṣaḥ Śunaśśepavadham vinā). Varuṇa was specially pleased. Viśvāmitra honoured Śunaśśepa before the Assembly and adopted him as his son and made him the eldest, taking precedence over his other sons. Those who did not accept his priority were cursed and those who acquiesced were blessed. All this happened on the south bank of the Gautamī. Innumerable are the holy places (8014) thereat,¹⁰³ they being named after Hariścandra, Śunaśśepa, Viśvāmitra, Rohita and so on.

This Purāṇa in a later chapter (150) describes how in another tīrtha called Paiśāca, a vipra was freed from a ghostly existence. That vipra is no other than our Ajigarta (or Jigarti as the text transforms him), who merited that punishment because he sold his middle son Śunaśśepa to a Kṣatriya for being sacrificed. During life, he suffered severe illness, after death was subjected to untold punishments in Hell and finally was turned into a ghost. Śunaśśepa once, while passing that way, heard a deep groaning sound, on tracing which he was told by the ghost, the miserable punishment it was fated to suffer. Śunaśśepa was stricken with sorrow, bathed in the Gautamī and offered watery oblation¹⁰⁴ to the father (pitṛ). Ajigarta was absolved of the sin and ascended heaven.

While this account of the Brahma Purāṇa corresponds in all significant details with the AB, the deliverance of Śunaśśepa is effected in a peculiar manner. This poetical innovation is natural to an age which looked upon sacrifices, particularly the human sacrifice, with horror. The sacrificial age had been substituted by an age which believed in washing off all sins in the holy waters of the Ganges. So all stories naturally converge into this doctrine which appealed to the common people whose outlook, with time and tide, had totally changed. Ajigarta's redemption is, of course, a novelty.

(2) Vāyu Purāṇa

The version of the Śunaśśepa story given here¹⁰⁵ fully accords with that given in Harivaṃśa,¹⁰⁶ but for the substitution of Haridaśva for Hariścandra which,

103. ityādyasṭasahasraṇi tīrthānyatha caturdaśa /

104. For the moment, the Purāṇa does not mind the incongruity of Śunaśśepa offering tarpaṇa for one who was no longer father to him !

105. BI ed. Mitra (1888) Vol. II, ch. 29 st. 89-92.

106. But Narahari that VP follows Mbh. It was more proper to say Vāyu Purāṇa and Harivaṃśa bear all identity except the name Haridaśva, which is but oversight on the part of the author of Harivaṃśa. A look into the original texts and the accompanying conspectus will convince.

clearly, is an oversight. Most of the verses are common to both. It is not easy to say which of the two was the borrower. Vāyu Purāṇa is assigned to an age¹⁰⁷ earlier than the celebrated Bāṇa (early 7th cent.), who heard the Purāṇa read to him, and later than the Gupta period (4th and 5th cent.) which is described in the Purāṇic text. Which then is the date of Harivaṃśa which is a complement to the Mahābhārata? As already remarked quite a wide period of time has been suggested i.e. 4th cent. B.C. to 4th cent. A.D., during which the Great Epic of India took shape so as to comprehend 'the present extent, contents and character'. Even then, allowance must be given for small alterations and additions which continued to be made in later centuries. It will be nearer truth if we think that both Vāyu Purāṇa and Harivaṃśa owe to a common source, may be in this case Mahābhārata.

(3) Bhāgavata Purāṇa

This Purāṇa¹⁰⁸ which is ascribed to the 10th cent. A.D. by Winternitz¹⁰⁹ and to the 9th by C. V. Vaidya and others, narrates the Śunaśśepa legend in two contexts. The first part of it up to his deliverance from the stakes is related in connection with Hariścandropākhyāna,¹¹⁰ as the sacrifice was celebrated under the aegis of that king. The second part viz. his adoption into the Viśvāmitra family is narrated in what is called Paraśurāmopākhyāna.¹¹¹ The story of Viśvāmitra comes there naturally as the two heroes Paraśurāma and Viśvāmitra are closely related as members of one family. For as shown in the previous section (see genealogical table), Paraśurāma's grandmother Satyavati is Viśvāmitra's sister.

The two narrations put together fully and accurately reproduce the version of AB, the difference being only in the vehicle of expression. The Brāhmaṇa is a mixture of Vedic prose and the gāthā while the Purāṇa is entirely in the śloka; still, there is so much of verbal correspondence that it is only fair to say that the author of the Purāṇa has rewritten the AB in the form of verse, with the ancient text actually before him.¹¹² But one change, and that for the better perhaps, 107. Winternitz HIL 1, pp. 553-554.

108. Ed. Eugene Burnouf (Paris 1847). A beautiful but incomplete edition. Only nine skandhas have been published in three volumes. Burnouf's valuable introduction to the Bhāgavata Purāṇa has been profusely quoted by scholars. He is highly praised by Max Müller as a great teacher. It was inspiration derived from this savant that prompted M.M. to conceive, undertake and bring out the famous edition of the Rgveda with Sāyana's commentary. The closing paragraph of M.M.'s preface to the second volume of the first edition reveals both the teacher and the pupil. "When I heard of his death," M.M. records, "I felt—and I believe that many engaged in similar studies shared the feeling—as if our work had lost much of its charm and its purpose. 'What will Burnouf say?' was my earliest thought, on completing the first volume of the Rgveda. And now, as I am finishing the second, in its turn submitted to the judgment of so many scholars whose friendship I value and whose learning I admire, my thoughts turn again to him who is no longer among us, and I think, not without sadness, of what his judgment would have been." 1853, pp. xi-xli of Vol. I, Second Edition, 1890. Gorresio, Roth, Goldstücker, M. M. and several others were fellow-students under Burnouf.

109. Winternitz, HIL, (Calcutta Univ. 1927) Vol. I, p. 556, and n. 3 same page.

110. Ed. Burnouf, Vol. III, Skandha IX, ch. 7 vv. 6-25.

111. Ibid. ch. 16 vv. 28-36.

112. Ch. XVI vv. 33-36 are repetition of the AB text almost verbatim.

may be noticed. Indra who was pleased with the sacrifice gave the golden chariot to Hariścandra, and not to Śunaśśepa as told in the AB. That it is a weak spot in the Aitareya construction has already been discussed.¹¹³ The Bhāgavata adds support to the view.¹¹⁴

(4) Devī Bhāgavata

The claim of this work to be classed among the eighteen main Purāṇas has not been granted,¹¹⁵ perhaps reasonably, judging from the prolixity of its style and nauseam, not to speak of the kind of subject-matter which marks the extreme into which a narrator's license can carry. The Śunaśśepākhyāna is here told in no less than 4 chapters¹¹⁶ making a total of 239 ślokas. One feature is that in the bare outline it has not much strayed from the ancient source the Aitareya. The personalities are almost all the same, the motifs are the same. But the haltings at every step to elaborate a detail with unbridled fantasy have rendered the narrative heavy, sometimes the serenity of the story has been rudely disturbed, so much so that it verges on absurdity e.g. Hariścandra's bargaining with Varuṇa and the behaviour of this august divinity of the Veda, Supreme Lord of Law and Order, as depicted in this work, provide more of amusement than of high ideals like a stern sense of duty by the God or by the ancestors. The conversations¹¹⁷ between the king and the God remind one of a bargaining in which the common folk indulge. To give another instance, when the sacrifice was afoot¹¹⁸ with Śunaśśepa bound to the stakes, it is neither tragedy nor a holy sacrifice that the book describes. The sacrifice converts itself into a rabble and a melodrama. For a historical study of the legend, however, the work provides valuable material. It illustrates the part the narrator's fancy plays in the growth or transformation of a legend. And, as such works are composed for the sake of readers or listeners, they easily betray the level of culture and the standard of taste which the people had attained or to which they had descended. Now a few details.

(a) Hariścandra does penance on the banks of the Ganges to appease Varuṇa, by the advice of Vasiṣṭha, his family priest. That Nārada did not appear in such a recent work is rather strange.

113. See supra section 3.

114. Tataḥ puruṣamedhena Hariścandro mahāyāśāḥ
Muktodaro'yajad devān Varuṇādīn mahatkatṭhāḥ / 20
Viśvāmitro'bhavat tasmīn hotā cādhyaryur ātmavān
Jamadagnīr abhūd Brahmā Vasiṣṭho'yāsyas sāmagāḥ / 21
Tasmāi tuṣṭo dadāvindrah śātakumbhamayam ratham
Śunaśśephasya mātātmyam upariṣṭāt pravakṣyate / 22.

Compare Pārgiter's remarks on p. 63 JRAS, 1917.

115. Winternitz HIL Vol. I (Calcutta), p. 555.

116. Devī-Bhāgavata (Poona edn. with Marāṭhī tr.) Skandha VII chs. 14-17, whereas the Rām. devotes 2 cantos with 48 ślokas on the whole. Mbh. (3), Hari (6), Bhāg (25) and VP (4).

117. The whole of ch. 15. Ibid.

118. Ch. 16.23-59, 17.1-38. Ibid.

(b) After the birth of the child, the king's manner of dodging the god is somewhat different. Each time Varuṇa is put off, the period of advantage gained is more; the arguments are quite ingenious but not high in taste. Thus after the birth of a child the father is purified in ten days but the mother is fit for rites, only after a month; so the God was put off for one month. Then the teeth should appear. Then the boy deserves to have his hair-cut (caula). The fourth round is won on the pretext of upanayana (Initiation to Study) and the fifth by samāvartana (Return from Study). On the sixth round, Rohita escaped to the forest even without the knowledge of the father.¹¹⁹ Wrathful at this, Varuṇa cursed the king to suffer from dropsy (jalodara).

(c) Rohita learning of the father's illness wants to return to the capital. But Indra, in the form of an old vipra, advises him to stay away on a most ludicrous argument, unworthy of a god: 'Life is dear to all creatures. On account of life only, the wife and children become dear. In order to protect his life, the king will kill you at the sacrifice and get cured of his illness. Therefore you should not go back to the father's house. When the father is dead, then only you will go for the sake of obtaining the kingdom.¹²⁰ Again and again, the divine lord appeared and prevented Rohita by means of ingenious arguments, from getting back to his place.

(d) Hariścandra goes again to Vasiṣṭha seeking advice as to what to do to cure the illness. He advises: 'Perform sacrifice by means of a son bought for price, then the curse will end'. The king sent the ministers in search of a son to buy. Śunaśśepa was bought off for a hundred cows from Ajigarta who was living in penury.

(e) When the victim was tied to the sacrificial post there was great commotion in the assembly. Śunaśśepa himself was weeping. The Śamitr (the killer of the sacrificial animal) refused to do his duty which was on this occasion too cruel to bear. Ajigarta came forward to perform the act for double the fee. All were struck aghast; they began to curse Ajigarta:

Piśāco'yam mahāpāpi krūrakarmā dvijākṛtiḥ

Yas tvayam svasutam hantum udyataḥ kulapāmsanaḥ /¹²¹

At this stage Viśvāmitra intervened and pleaded before the king to release the victim, as it was not fair to cut up another body in order to save his own. The king refused to honour his proposal. Then Viśvāmitra went up to Śunaśśepa and taught him the Vāruṇa-mantra which the latter recited with all devotion. Varuṇa was pleased and arrived on the scene. Hariścandra begged his mercy for the whole medley and Varuṇa permitted him to let go the boy.

119. According to AB, Rohita was apprised of the situation in Varuṇa's presence after he became fit to wear armour, upon which, he refused to submit to sacrifice and went away to forest, bow in hand.

120. Ch. 16. 7-9. Ibid.

121. Ch. 16. 34. Ibid.

(f) Now another coloured thread is woven into the texture. The released Śunaśśepa addresses the sacrificial assembly ! 'O gentlemen of omniscient knowledge ! whose son am I now ? Who is my father hereafter ? With your verdict, I shall resort to him for protection'.

Putro'ham kasya sarvajñāḥ pitā me ko'grataḥ param
Bhavatām vacanāt tasya śaraṇam pravrajāmyaham /¹²²

The members said : 'Of whom else would he be the son, when he is Ajigarta's progeny ?' The sage Vāmadeva : "No." He was sold for price and the king bought him, so he belongs to the king, undoubtedly. Or, he should belong to Varuṇa, as he released him from the bonds. For, five kinds are the fathers as they say :

Annadātā bhayatrātā tathā vidyāpradaś ca yaḥ
Tathā vittaprasadaś caiva pañcaite pitarāḥ smṛtāḥ /¹²³

There was a deadlock when the god's name was brought into competition. But Vasīṣṭha gave a reasonable judgment : "When the father, devoid of affection, sold the son, he ceased to be that for, he got wealth instead. The king acquired him no doubt, but he forfeited his claim when he offered him to the gods by yoking him to the post, and he has derived benefit also. Nor does Śunaśśepa belong to Varuṇa, who released him only after being pleased with his praise". So,

Kauśikasya sutaś cāyam ariṣṭe yena rakṣitaḥ
Mantram datvā mahāvīryam Varuṇasyātisaṅkaṭe /¹²⁴

'He becomes the son of Kauśika who saved him from calamity by imparting a powerful mantra in praise of Varuṇa'.¹²⁵ Members of the assembly immediately approved of the decision. Śunaśśepa went over to Viśvāmitra, who held him by the right hand and took him home at once (satvaraḥ). Varuṇa, pleased, went to his abode. And all went to their own houses :¹²⁶

122. 17.22. Ibid.

123. What enumeration ! Five kinds, but only four are stated. The father who begets is the fifth, perhaps. 17.27 ibid.

124. 17.33-34. Ibid.

125. Note Vasīṣṭha's high regard for Viśvāmitra.

126. Viśvāmitras tu jagrāha tam kare dakṣiṇe tadā
Eli putra gṛham me tvam ityuktvā premapūrītaḥ /
Varuṇas tu prasannātmā jagāma ca svamālayam /
Rtvijāś ca tathā sabhyāḥ svagṛhān nirayustadā /
17. 36-38

A Conspectus of the Sunāsēpa References

The work	Concerned king	Purpose of	The victim	Substitute	Lineage	The price	Viśvāmitra's part	Gods concerned and other remarks
1	2	3	4	5	6	7	8	9
(1) RV	—	—	Sunāsēpa	—	—	—	—	Agni liberated Sunāsēpa from the stakes (RV 5.2.7) Varuṇa released Sunāsēpa from fetters 1.24.12.13.
(2) AB	Hariscandra	for the sake of a son	Rohita	Sunāsēpa	Middle son of starving Aji-garta	Cows 100 100 100	Viśvāmitra priest at the sacrifice; later as S. went over to him, Viśvā, adopted him into his family as eldest son.	Prajāpati, Agni, Varuṇa, agni, Agni, Viśvedevas, Indra, Aśvins and Uṣas were praised in 97 ṛk. verses. The chiefs fell off as Uṣas was praised.
(3) Sarvā.	Hariscandra	No sacrifice is indicated	—	—	—	—	—	Hariscandra's name occurs as an alternative Devarāta, suggesting Sunāsēpa. 28.0. His

The work	Concerned king	Purpose of	The victim	Substitute	Lineage	The price	Viśvāmitra part	Gods concerned and other remarks
1	2	3	4	5	6	7	8	9
(4) Rām.	Ambariṣa	common weal	Not specified. A human being according to Gor. victim carried away by Indra.	Sunās-śepa.	Middle son of Relka (not stated as poor (Gor.)	100,000 cows and heaps of precious stones.	Viś, described as uncle, did not attend Sacrifice. But, prior to that, at the puṣkara, taught two gāthās that secured his release. Sequel like adoption etc. not dealt with.	Indra liberated Sunāsśepa. Varuna not mentioned. All sons, Madhuchandras etc. were cursed before sacrifice as they refused to substitute for Sunāsśepa.
(5) Mbh.	Hariscandra	not stated	Sunās-śepā of great penance (mahā-tapāḥ)	—	Son of Relka	—	Sunāsśepa liberated by Viśvāmitra though a victim at the sacrifice, became his eldest son. All the 50 sons who did not accept were cursed.	Sunāsśepa pleased the gods by his own brilliance (ātmatejasā) śepa's adoption by Viśvāmitra and also the god's favour to Sunāsśepa and then to Viśvāmitra.

complicity in the sacrifice of Sunāsśepa has to be imagined as AB dates earlier than Sarāv.

(6) Hari.	Hariśaśva	not stated	Śunās- śepa	—	Middle son of Reka; Jamadaagni elder and Śunali-pucclā younger brother.	—	Śunāsēpa became the eldest son of Viśvāmitra known as Devurāta.	No reference to cursing the sons. No details.
(7) Brahna	Hariś-candra	for the sake of a son	Rohita	Śunās- śepa	Middle son Aṅgarta, poor and furnished.	1000 of cows grain, gold and cloth.	Viś. attends the sacrifice and addresses the Assembly to pronounce S. free. Bath in the River and prayer to Gods. Viś. adopted Ś. as eldest son. Some sons cursed and some blessed.	Varuṇa is prominent. Heavenly Voice- aśartravāk. Vasistha and Vāmadeva as priests. Sacrifice without killing. Aṅgarta's redemption.
(8) VP	Hariś-candra	not stated	Śunāsēpa	—	exactly same as 6 above. Some repeated.	same as 6 above	No reference to cursing of the sons.	No reference to cursing of the sons.
(9) Bhāg	Hariś-candra	for the sake of a son	Rohita	Śunāsēpa	Middle son of Aṅgarta	price not stated.	Viś. Hotr at the sacrifice then the adoption as eldest son etc. just as in AB (2) above.	Same as (2) above.

The work	Concerned king	Purpose of	The victim	Substitute	Lineage	The price	Viśvāmītra part	Gods concerned and other remarks
1	2	3	4	5	6	7	8	9
(10) Devī Bh.	Hariścandra	for the sake of a son	Rohita	Śunaśśeṣa	Middle son of Aṅgarta (nirdhana)	cows 100 200	Viś. present at sacrifice, pleads with king for Ś.'s life. On refusal teaches the Varuṇa-mantra. Discussion as to whom Ś. should belong. Opinionous divergent. Vasiṣṭha gave verdict in favour of Viś.	Varuṇa is the god who freed Ś. Vasiṣṭha, family priest, was constantly approached by the king for advice.

127. The works tabulated are : 1. Rgveda (RV), 2. Aitareya Brāhmaṇa (AB), 3. Śarvānukramanī (Sarvā), 4. Rāmāyana (Rām), 5. Mahābhārata (Mbh.), 6. Hari-Vaiṣṇava (Hart.), 7. Brahma Purāṇa (Brahma), 8. Vāyu Purāṇa (VP), 9. Bhāgavata (Bhag.), 10. Devī-Bhāgavata (Devī Bh.)

128. Note—Ś = Śunaśśeṣa, Viś. = Viśvāmītra.

129. Note—The Nirukta alludes to Śunaśśeṣa being bought for price in support of the dictum that men are also sold like women. This has been amplified in the Vās Dh. Sūtra (17.30 at seq) which records another interesting phase of the story. After Ś. was set free there arose a dispute among the priests as to whose son he should be. He did not respond. Then they said : Let him choose any one he likes. Then Śunaśśeṣa chose to be son of Viśvāmītra who was the Hotṛ priest. The Viṣṇu Purāṇa, in one sentence (4.7.16), says : The son of Viśvāmītra was Śunaśśeṣa, originally descendent of Bhṛgu, now given by the gods and thence named Devarāta.

REVIEW OF THE CONSPECTUS

A glance at the conspectus will at once show how the various works have deviated from the main current of the story. The incident after all is one, it did not happen to two or more Śunaśśepas, nor did it occur in two or more places. Therefore while employing expressions like version and recension which are almost becoming technical with the advance of critical scholarship, some care requires to be exercised. Should we, for instance, talk of the number of versions of the Śunaśśepa story, ordinarily we shall be obliged to say they are as many as there are works which deal with the legend; because, with each narration, there will be some innovation, wanton or otherwise. Such changes are mere embellishments and are of little consequence regarding the framework. Secondly, the time-factor should also be considered; the distinction of different versions must naturally apply to works which are more or less contemporaneous. With regard to works beyond the range of history the question does not arise, for all are ancient. But a work of the 5th cent. A.D. cannot presume to vie with the ancient Aitareya to propound a different version of the story. Any version after all should be backed up by an element of truth. Flagrant innovations which reflect the pulse of a people or of an age cannot claim the status of versions, indeed. The Brahma Purāṇa, the first-mentioned of all the Purāṇas, for instance, introduces the Invisible Voice (aśarīra-vāk)—‘Do not sacrifice Śunaśśepa; the sacrifice is complete without the immolation’. Śunaśśepa bathes in the Gomati-kṣetra and is absolved of all responsibility by the sacrifice. The motive for this innovation is purely local, that is to glorify the holiness of the Ganges and to signify a revolt against human sacrifice. But can this be designated as a different version? It is not supported by any trend of tradition which touches the hoary past. The Devī Bhāgavata is full of innovations which are introduced to explain, as it were, the different stages of the story. Thus Hariścandra according to AB first asks for 10 days’ time to sacrifice the new born babe, but, the Devī Bhāgavata raises it to one month, for the father is eligible to perform religious rites after 10 days of child-birth, but the mother becomes eligible only after a month! She should accompany the husband in all religious functions, according to the Ordinances. Can this be called a version? Harivaṃśa and Vāyu Purāṇa find themselves in a medley. Having represented the traditional descent of Jamadagni as the son of Reika, the author is at a loss to fix up the Śunaśśepa brothers. Fortunately he did not say that Jamadagni was also called Śunaḥpuecha, but simply removed the last man, Śunolāṅgūla, in the ‘seriatim arrangement’! Thus, the brotherhood bears this galaxy—Jamadagni Śunaśśepa and Śunaḥpuecha. Can this be called a version? Similarly, Haridaśva is an unconscious substitute for Hariścandra. When once it entered the holy writ, it was suffered because, perhaps, Haridaśva is a name of the Sun God, from whom the Ikṣvākus were descended. Hariścandra was an Ikṣvāku; hence, there could be reconciliation by regarding the king as Haridaśva alias Hariścandra.

Let us consider one other point. In most of the works, the legend is treated en passant. The importance given or the interest which attaches to the story may be measured, in a way, by the extent of the description in each. The Aitareya, owing to its antiquity, may not come into the picture. All the same, it devotes a whole chapter in six khaṇḍas (sections) comprising roughly 55 prose bits and 31 gāthās. Other works allot as follows :

1. Rāmāyaṇa—	48	Ślokas	(2 cantos)
2. Mahābhārata—	3	"
3. Harivaṃśa—	6	"	(total of two contexts)
4. Brahma Purāṇa—	113	"	(2 chapters)
5. Vāyu Purāṇa—	4	"
6. Bhāgavata—	25	"	(parts of 2 chapters)
7. Devī Bhāgavata	194	"	(4 chapters)

Of these, Nos. 4, 6 and 7 follow Aitareya Brāhmaṇa, except the narrator's amplifications here and there. The main features are common, as shown in the conspectus. Nos. 1, 2, 3 and 5 show some divergences. One common divergence that really matters is that Śunaśśepa is the son of Ṛeika not of Ajigarta. That is, the family itself is differently stated, for Ṛeika is a Bhārgava, Ajigarta is an Āṅgīrasa. While the orthodox school, dating back to the time of the Sarvānukramaṇī and prior still the Arṣānukramaṇī, reaffirms the AB account by assigning Śunaśśepa to the Āṅgīrasa family changed to that of Viśvāmītra, the Rāmāyaṇa, Mahābhārata, Harivaṃśa and Vāyu Purāṇa declare him to be a Bhārgava changed into a Vaiśvāmītra. Taking recourse to conjecture only—for no other deduction is possible,—this deviation might have been based on stories current among the populace; it may represent popular tradition in other words. Another point is about the King's name, Ambarīṣa in the Rāmāyaṇa; Hariścandra in Mbh. and VP, Haridaśva in Harivaṃśa. We have submitted that Haridaśva might have been an oversight on the part of Harivaṃśa. A similar plea must reconcile the divergence of Rām., as Ambarīṣa is nowhere else mentioned as an Ikṣvāku prince. The Ambarīṣa of the Mbh. is just an ancient king (Sorensen p. 30), nothing to do with the Ikṣvākus. Curiously, Hariścandra is not stated among the Ikṣvāku princes, whose dynastic list is given in Rām. (1.70). Perhaps our Hariścandra is identical with Ambarīṣa. For the present purpose we submit that the difference in names is due to the narrator's whim or ignorance. The dynastic lists presented in the Epics and the Purāṇas are truly confusing and utterly inconsistent with one another.

If, in the light of the above discussion, we come to think of versions at all, they can only be two; one, the orthodox version represented by AB, followed by the Brāhma, Bhāgavata and Devī Bhāgavata; the other, the popular version reflected in the Rām., Mbh., Hari. and VP.

A	The Ṛgvedic Nucleus	B
Orthodox version		Popular version
Aitareya Brāhmaṇa (55+31)		Rāmāyaṇa (48)
Brahma Purāṇa (113)		Mahābhārata (3)
Bhāgavata (25)		Harivaṃśa (6)
Devī Bhāgavata (194)		Vāyu Purāṇa (4)

Works under A, have dealt with the legend at some length and hence admit of correct appreciation. Under B, we can see the summary manner in which the story is disposed of, on the basis of which no inference of certain validity can be drawn. The chief criterion in so grouping them is the likelihood of a popular version concurrent with the orthodox one.

IX

MODERN OPINIONS

The Legend of Śunaśśepa has been a favourite study to many a scholar of recent times. At first it drew attention as a very ancient story so full of human interest. But later scholars like Max Müller and Roth dived deep into their bearings and recorded their impressions a hundred years ago. The former translated the entire piece into English in his history of Ancient Sanskrit Literature¹³⁰ and the latter's critique, with a German translation of the legend, came out in the Indische Studien.¹³¹ An exhaustive and invaluable study has since been provided by Keith in his Rig-veda Brāhmaṇas Translated.¹³² In the long period of time that divided the two scholars Roth and Keith, the legend continued to be of interest to many, from the point of view of Human Sacrifices in Ancient India. Hillebrandt¹³³ and Eggeling¹³⁴ considered the question deeply. The one believed and the other did not believe in the existence of human sacrifices. Wilson wrote an essay on human sacrifices and John Muir incorporated his impressions in his Compendium.¹³⁵

Before dealing with this subject of world-wide interest, we may know how the legend has impressed as a piece of literature. Roth has surmised a more ancient metrical version of the story;¹³⁶ this inference is evidently based on the fact that certain verses (gāthās) have been interspersed in the narrative, and sometimes the intervening prose appears to patch up the factual detail between two verses. The gāthās are, it is generally agreed, reminiscent of what was most current among the people, and perpetuated in oral transmission from person to person and generation to generation. Regarding the make up of the story, Roth arrived at the following conclusions :

(i) The oldest legend about Śunaśśepa (alluded to in RV 1.24.11-13 and RV 5.2.7) knows only of his miraculous deliverance by divine help from the peril of death.

(ii) This story becomes expanded into a narrative of Śunaśśepa's threatened slaughter as a sacrificial victim and of his deliverance through Viśvāmitra.

130. ASL pp. 408-420.

131. IS I. 458-464, 2, 112-123.

132. HOS Vol. 25 (1920)

133. Ritualliteratur, pp. 153-6

134. SBE XLIV. xli- xlv.

135. OST I² pp. 355-360.

136. Weber II. p. 47, Keith (HOS 25) p. 63.

(iii) This immolation-legend becomes severed into two essentially distinct versions,¹³⁷ the oldest forms of which are respectively represented by the stories in the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa and the Rāmāyaṇa.

(iv) The latter becomes eventually the predominant one, but its proper central point is no longer the deliverance from immolation but the incorporation of Śunaśśepa, or (with a change of persons) of Ṛeika, into the family of the Kuśikas. It thus becomes in the end a family legend of the race of Viśvāmitra.

There is thus no historical, perhaps not even a genealogical, result to be gained here. On the other hand, the story obtains an important place in the circle of those narratives in which the sacerdotal literature expressed its views regarding the character and agency of Viśvāmitra.¹³⁸

The late Professor Keith, polymath and critic, has analysed the legend threadbare. It is a piece of work which should serve as an example of critical investigation. Though often oppressive, and never satisfied with the accuracy of things like the proverbial tārkika,¹³⁹ Keith as a critic undoubtedly exercised a powerful restraint on the hasty and the fanciful in the Research Forum. It must be said, however, that his writings lacked warmth and sympathy, qualities, for instance, that endeared Max Müller to all classes of the literati.¹⁴⁰

Keith¹⁴¹ notices a threefold structure in the legend comprising (a) the episode of Varuṇa, Hariścandra and Rohita, (b) the episode of Śunaśśepa and Ajigarta (add Rohita to provide the link); and (c) the episode of Viśvāmitra's sons and Śunaśśepa (add, again, Viśvāmitra also). To restate the 'krama'

- (a) Hariścandra—Varuṇa—Rohita,
- (b) Rohita—Ajigarata—Śunaśśepa; and
- (c) Śunaśśepa—Viśvāmitra—Viśvāmitra's sons.

It is pointed out, as already shown by us in the sub-section on RV references, that the RV provides no information whatever about Hariścandra or Rohita or Ajigarta; so, the whole narrative is a later invention. The utilisation of the RV

137. Mr. Narahari concludes his survey of the Legend of Śunaśśepa in Vedic and post-Vedic Literature as follows: "We have thus three recensions of the legend of Śunaśśepa." Vide A Volume of Studies in Indology presented to MM. P. V. Kane (1941) p. 307. We are obliged to point out that this is an uncritical statement from all accepted canons of textual criticism. cf. the explanations of "Recension and version" in Dr. Katre's Introduction to Indian Textual Criticism" (1941), p. 95. Narahari perhaps meant to say that versions of the story were as many.

138. Rendered by Muir. OST, 1st p. 359 f.

139. One is reminded of Kṣemendra's compliment to this class of scholars in his Kavikanṭhābharāṇa (Kāvya-mālā), an excellent tract on how to become a poet:

Kurvīta sāhityavidas sakāśe śrutārjanam kāvyasamudbhavāya /
Na tārkikam kevalaśābdikam vā kuryād gurum sūktivikāśavighnam //

140. This aspect was specially stressed in numerous messages of sympathy and love that poured in after the demise of this venerable savant, from Queen to commoner. See Life and Letters of Max Müller published by his wife a year after. Vol. II, pp. 419-439. As one review aptly puts it—Max Müller made knowledge agreeable (p. 430).

141. Rīg-Veda Brāhmaṇas Translated (HOS 25, 1920), pp. 61-68.

verses, hundred in all, must be ascribed 'to a time when it was desired to find recitations for the Hotṛ priest at the Rājasūya in connection with the tale of Śunaśśepa'. Regarding the pre-Brāhmaṇa state of the legend, Keith says, "In the opinion of Roth, the legend grew up into its present content during the period when the collection of the RV was in process of being carried out and it was due to it that the series of hymns in the first book to various deities was ascribed to the authorship of Śunaśśepa. He lays stress on the argument that the argument of the hymns in part depends upon the theory of authorship. On the other hand, in the view of Aufrecht, the authorships ascribed by the Anukramaṇī are compiled from the notices of the Brāhmaṇas and, while this view is not altogether tenable, it would be impossible to come to any definite conclusion regarding the period of growth of the legend from the order of hymns in the Saṃhitā to the attribution to Śunaśśepa of the hymns in question." It must be remembered however that the gāthās that are incorporated in AB presuppose the existence of a constructed popular ballad which marked out not only the saving of Śunaśśepa but also his transfer into the family of Viśvāmitra. Keith is satisfied that "from (AB) vii. 17.3 to the end of the verses it runs as a perfectly simple narrative requiring only the names of the speakers to be supplied to make it clear, just as they are supplied in the epic." But both Roth and Keith do not vouchsafe to the not impossible inclusion of Hariścandra and Rohita in the gāthā version, because the Hariścandra-gāthās (AB 7.13 and 15) are "general in the extreme, and so inappropriate is the exhortation to the king to obtain a son in ch. 13 that it is addressed to Brāhmaṇas...¹⁴² The verses are not chosen out of narrative made up apropos of Hariścandra but are mere general maxims pitted up into a story." But there must be some cause for the sacrifice of Śunaśśepa. Keith is prepared to think: "that may merely have been an ordinary tale of the performance of the human sacrifice and not a tale of the extraordinary and almost ludicrous action of Hariścandra and Nārada. Very probably the two stories of Hariścandra and his son and Śunaśśepa have been allowed to mingle, as they seem to belong to different strata of tradition, the first falling among the many stories of the sacrifice of children among the Semetic and other races, and the latter reprobating the practice of human sacrifice as a custom, perhaps one specially favoured by the Aṅgiras family, which was opposed by other Vedic families." There is no trace of hostility between Vasīṣṭha and Viśvāmitra who appear as Brahman and Hotṛ amicably at the sacrifice. There are traces of the regal character attributed to Viśvāmitra, since the young Śunaśśepa is said to succeed to the lordship of the Jahnus as well as the divine lore of the Gāthinas.¹⁴³

Oldenberg thought that the Śunaśśepa legend as given in AB provided a good instance of the ancient ākhyānas, which are characterised as narratives in prose and verse, the former supplying suitable introductions to or amplifications of the latter. This is not impossible, for even today, the existence of old legends in oral

142. Kim nu malam kim ajinam kimu śmaśrūṇi kim tapah /
Putram brahmāṇa icchadhvam sa vai loko'vadāvadaḥ //
AB 7.13.9.4.

143. PB xxi. 12.2

tradition only, many of them—with all their dialectal liberty, simplicity and homely appeal, would add support to Oldenberg's theory. They are ballads in prose and verse, transmitted with an understandable shyness and reserve among the women-folk only for the ostensible reason that men may laugh at the want of literary polish in it. We imagine, as we witness today, that these ballads have had a continuous tradition from time immemorial. However, Oldenberg was severely criticised and opposed by Keith and the theory rejected, we should dare to confess a feeling, with the latter's tārkika instincts¹⁴⁴ coming into full play. It is not that everything in the Ākhyāna theory is based on definite evidence and sound judgment. Yet the deep thinker as he visualised a glimmering light in the horizon pushed his way through, tripping here and there owing to darkness. Constructive criticism would strive to enlighten these dark spots and help the distant light to spread itself. Thus while reading in the ancient Saṁhitā (RV) the dialogue between Purūravas and Urvaśī, or that between Saramā and the Paṇis it is natural to think of a word of explanation here and there being necessary. The psychological processes in our own minds while understanding the statement and the reply in a dialogue find expression in words, in the Ākhyāna so-called. Such might have been provided by the ancient Vedic bards. But Oldenberg went farther than reasonable, of course in enthusiasm, to assert that such explanatory matter once formed regular part of the Veda, since disappeared or lost. Such unnecessary generalisations set the weight of suspicion on the whole edifice and Keith was too quick to let the key-stone gather cement. Taking the AB account itself as a composite narrative, we are unable to see how a status as such cannot be granted to it.¹⁴⁵ Whether reminiscent of the hypothetical Ākhyāna of the Veda or not, the AB narrative in itself may, with a certain amount of co-operative thinking, be regarded as an instance of the Ākhyāna. Defects are pointed out that the verses of the narrative are loosely linked with the prose and that gnomic verses found elsewhere are worked into it and all that. True, how will all that disprove the main characteristic of a more or less logically sequential mixture of prose and verse? Besides we want to submit that, in the Ākhyāna, which, after all reflects a popular character rather than the high-flown literary unities of action, time and place, we do expect some paradoxes, anomalies and flagrant inconsistencies, which in a way—provided they are not absurd—are their peculiar and attractive features.¹⁴⁶ Otherwise how can tradition subsist? How can it survive the ravages of time and clime, if people's fancy did not feed it specially at a time when writing was a problem and printing unknown? This may be another extreme, but a consideration along the line is necessary while appreciating ancient literary traditions which, may it be remembered, are ever more of the people than of the scholar.

144. Keith, JRAS 1911, pp. 979-1009.

145. Vedic literary tradition actually designates it an ākhyāna, in the sense of a short story complete in itself. Oldenberg only went to the length of defining it and also superimposing its existence as part of the Saṁhitā.

146. Witness for instance the popular version of the Śunāśsepa legend in the Devī Bhāgavata or even the more polished yet impossible innovations of the Brahma. The process of change is inevitable.

Therefore there is still room enough for Oldenbergs while Keiths are absolutely needed to keep the 'balance of power'!

The Legend of Śunaśśepa has roused considerable interest among scholars, as revealing the prevalence of human sacrifice in Ancient India. Such a view is not unreasonable, for Śunaśśepa was actually bound to the stakes. He was saved, no doubt, by divine grace but the canons do not make provision for that. Human sacrifice under the name puruṣa-medha is prescribed by the Śāṅkhāyana Śrauta Sūtra (16.10 f.) and the Vaitana (37.10 ff.). An elaborate ceremony has developed in relation to it, in which, according to the Vājasaneyi Samhitā (30) as many as 184 persons of different denominations and professions have to be offered¹⁴⁷ as sacrifice. It is incredible on the face of it that such a ritual had ever had any practical demonstration. The consensus of opinion is that this human sacrifice was only a theoretical provision in the Sūtras, occasioned, as Keith opines, to remove the anomaly in the omission of man from the list of victims. The use of a man and four other victims is stated as an offering at the piling of the great fire altar. This usage is not actually laid down by any Brāhmaṇa, the most contemplated is the use of the head of a man who has been slain by lightning or by an arrow shot, not a victim killed for the purpose, and normally the head of a goat seems to have sufficed. But it is clearly no sacrifice at all.¹⁴⁸

There is the other world-wide custom of slaying a human being to act as the guardian of the foundations of a building. This is an unwritten and stealthy practice, if at all. It is no human sacrifice in the sense put forth by the Śrauta Sūtras.

Human sacrifice was not uncommon in Greece as we hear stories to the effect. It is revealed that it was widely practised in the age of the Indus Valley Civilisation.¹⁴⁹ Stray incidents are also reported from the Bible.¹⁵⁰ The theory of sacrificing or giving up what is our best or what we love most, in order to please the Almighty Creator, is not without force; it has some appeal to the cultivated mind and much more so to the credulous. The principle of surrender reaches its zenith when we hear a story that Rāvaṇa offered his head to please Śiva, or that Viṣṇu himself, finding a lotus less than a thousand while he worshipped the same God, without hesitation, pulled out his eye and offered at His feet. This kind of immolation has some justification, when it is viewed in a truly philosophic way. But that will not suit the world. The moment it is turned into a cult, it becomes barbarous, hence the universal abhorrence of it. One other point. If ever human sacrifice was contemplated and practised in order to please the Gods, well, the same Gods have recompensed the loss ten-fold. Even in the fables, there is no sacrifice without such compensation which would repair the loss completely. For the 147. Winternitz HIL p.174.

148. Keith RPV, pp. 347-348. Veda of the Black Yajus School Translated (HOS 18 and 19), pp. cxxxvii-exl.

149. A. P. Karmarkar, Human Sacrifice in Proto-India, ABORI 25 (1944), pp. 112-113.

150. Max Müller in ASL, p. 419.

sake of argument, Rāvaṇa sacrificed the one head but got ten in return and became master of the three worlds. Even so Viṣṇu; the eye was at once restored, and with it he became Supreme Lord of the three worlds. Śunaśśepa was sacrificed for all intents and purposes, the result was—Gods were pleased, Śunaśśepa himself was granted long life and Hariścandra was freed from illness. But when such principles and acts of subtlety and high thinking were canonised, the inevitable result would be brutal executions at dead of night, in mid-forest and amidst ghastly surroundings. Therefore quite early in the history of Man, counteraction expressed itself and to the best of our belief, the Śunaśśepa sacrifice is an instance of an effective protest against such a system, if it ever existed. It is colourfully represented by some that the native dwellers of India before the Aryan advent indulged in it and the Aryans by various means exerted a healthy influence upon them to give up such horrible customs.

X

ON THE NAME ŚUNAŚŚEPA

Śunaśśepa 'dog-tailed' (śuna iva śepo asya), is rather a funny name¹⁵¹ for a Ṛṣi, as he is known to be. He is one of the celebrated Centurion Seers (Śatareṇs) of the first maṇḍala of RV. He is complimented also as a reputed poet, born in the family of the Aṅgirasas (Āṅgirasō janmanā'syājigartīś śrutah kavīḥ) and yet possessing such an unpoetic name, sets one to think about it. The uncomplimentary if not despicable nature of it has been noticed by every scholar. Some have felt it not inappropriate with his indigent and, judging from later conduct, barbarous parentage.¹⁵² An opinion has been expressed also that though the name relates to a dog and all that, in the time of the R̥gveda it did not matter as the dog was not considered a despicable beast at all.¹⁵³ Some kind of endearment was felt or intended when, for instance, R̥cika's wife, the mother of Śunaśśepa said

Avikreyam sutam jyestham Bhagavān āha Bhārgavaḥ /
Mamāpi dayitam viddhi kaniṣṭham Śunakam prabho //¹⁵⁴

All the same, the queerness of the name and much more, the queerness of its being one of a synonymous series—Śunaḥpuccha, Śunaśśepa and Śunolāṅgūla—are undeniable. The names are truly artificial; they sound like nick-names.

That these names, as a series, are spurious is countenanced by the Harivaṁśa. While tracing the genealogy of Jamadagni and Viśvāmitra, there was a problem for

151. Amusing names are perhaps the feature of all times and all nations. Compare—Bull, Boot(e), Black, Burns, Baldwin, Butcher, Stone, Dry-den, Piggot, Swineburn etc., corresponding in Kannada—Kempa, Kariya, Guṇḍa, Hueca, Kāḷa, surnames like Teṅginakai or Meṇasinakai etc. Contrast the practice of gods' names only employed by some people, as a rule.

152. cf. Eggeling—SBE XLIV, p. xxxiv et seq., Winternitz HIL 1.213 n. A kind of censure is reflected in the retention of the genitive (aluk) in those names. cf. Pāṇini 6.3.21—"Saṣṭhyā ākrośe" Vārtika 4 thereon, Śepapucchalāṅgūleṣu śunaḥ samjāyām.

153. Hopkins—AmJPh. XV 'The Dog in the R̥g-Veda' pp. 154-63 (1894).

154. Rām. 1.61.17-18. The suffix ka signifies affection as in putraka, bālaka etc., note particularly the diminutive Śunaka from Śunolāṅgūla.

'Vyāsa'. Jamadagni was the son of Ŗeika by Satyavatī daughter of king Gādhi. Ŗeika chose to marry the princess whom he loved dearly; and being pleased with her, prepared the holy caru for the sake of progeny. She partook of it and gave birth to Jamadagni. But there was another legend current, relating to a Ŗeika who had three sons, the Śuna-brothers, the middle one being Śunaśśepa. So the undaunted author of the Harivaṃśa reconciled the divergence by grafting two of these, as brothers of Jamadagni, the status of the middle one being vouchsafed for Śunaśśepa. This brotherhood viz., Jamadagni, Śunaśśepa and Śunaḥpuccha became more ludicrous than the original combination. In these circumstances, our supposition that there should have been two Ŗeikas, stated in the foregoing pages, appears plausible.

That apart, it is sufficiently reasonable to think that the names of Śunaḥpuccha and Śunolāṅgūla are purely imaginary. These two are mentioned for the first time in AB and, only Śāṅkh ŚS, of so many works of Vedic Literature, repeats the names. Later, the Vārttika-kāra conceived a special vārttika comprehending only these three names, as an addendum to the sūtra "Ṣaṣṭhyā ākrośe" (0.3.21, SK. 981). That gave these mythical personalities a stamp of reality. Nevertheless, the purpose of the puccha and lāṅgūla has been no more than to provide the madhyama status to Śunaśśepa. The concept of the middle one, incidentally, itself deserves to be questioned on two grounds at least. Firstly it is, psychologically, an unsound and unnatural phenomenon; for, all children are the same to the parents. The distinction of the eldest and the youngest is an almost mischievous precept promulgated by the old text. Tradition fostered it, though in general, it has never been given to mankind to practise it. Secondly, it has no basis in the Saṃhitā, nor corroboration in any other work of the Vedic period which could be contemporaneous with it.

Now to the name Śunaśśepa itself. It occurs in the Saṃhitā thrice as already pointed out (RV 1.24.12, 13; 5.2.7). Other expressions in the Veda with Śuna prefixed are Śunāprṣṭha,¹⁵⁵ Śunāhotra,¹⁵⁶ Śunāsira,¹⁵⁷ Śuneṣita.¹⁵⁸ The word śuna itself occurs twelve times,¹⁵⁹ in two forms śunaḥ (thrice) and śunām (nine times). The Tāṇḍya Mahābrāhmaṇa mentions a Śunaskarṇa.¹⁶⁰

155. 7.80.1.

156. 2.18.6; 41.14; 17.

157. 4.57.5; 8. The Nighaṇṭu mentions the word with a double accent as a devatādvandva—Śunāsira (Nigh. 5.3.34). But in the Saṃhitā, the word is initially accented—Śunāsira.

158. 8.46.28.

159. Śunaḥ 1.182.4; 4.18.13; 8.55.3.

Śunām 1.117.18; 3.30.22; 4.3.11; 57.4⁵; 8¹; 6.16.4; 10.102.8; 126.7; 160.5. The superimposed figures denote the number of times the word occurs in the same stanza. For the purpose of counting the number of occurrences the whole stanza is taken as one.

160. TB 17.12.6 Śunaskarṇa is the name of a king (mentioned in BSS also), son of Śibi or of Baskiḥa who performed a certain rite, the Sarvasāra, and so died without disease. VI 2 p. 386. TāB, also called Pañcaviṃśa Brāhmaṇa is translated into English by Caland (ASB publication 1931).

Śunāpr̥ṣṭha is used as an adjective meaning 'possessed of fine backs' (śobhana-pr̥ṣṭha); so also Śūneṣita (analysed as śunā-iṣita) meaning 'drawn or carried along by the dog.'

Śunāsira signifies a dual divinity namely Indra-Vāyu. According to Yāska (Nir. IX.40),¹⁶¹ it is Vāyu and Āditya. Later, the expression signifies two agricultural deities, the personifications probably of 'the share and the plough', as Roth thinks.¹⁶²

Śunāhotra is the name of a Vedic R̥ṣi, father of Gr̥tsamada who is the Seer of the second Maṇḍala. Thrice it has appeared in RV and in loc. pl. only—śunā-hotreṣu. Once interpreted as referring to sacrificial vessels of that designation and twice as referring to the Śunahotras, the members of the Śunahotra family.¹⁶³

Though he does not figure in the Vedic text, we are quite familiar with the versatile Śaunaka under which name Gr̥tsamada is said to be known after he changed over from the Āngiras to the Bṛghu family. In the Bṛghu family he was adopted as the son of Śunaka.¹⁶⁴ It is however significant that, in the hymns he saw, he styles himself as a Śunahotra.

Now the word śunām¹⁶⁵ in the Veda is one of 20 names of sukha (happiness), sometimes used adverbially also meaning 'happily' (Nigh 3.6.11). Thus the expressions, Śunahotra (one who sacrifices for the sake of happiness), Śunap̥r̥ṣṭha (the horse which possesses happy, pleasurable, therefore fine backs), Śunaka (the happy man) and Śaunaka (son of the happy man)—all are of good import. The adjective Śūneṣita 'drawn by the dog,' (śunā-iṣita) is in that sense, an instance of the aluk-samāsa with the instrumental suffix not lost. Thus we see, so far as the names of persons in the Vedic range are concerned the first member śuna has consistently conveyed good sense.

Why should it be different in the case of Śunāśśēpa? The pada text significantly enough does not analyse the word but shows the double accent, which is explained according to Pāṇini 6.2.140—Ubhe vanaspatyādiṣu yugapat (SK 3871).¹⁶⁶ The first member here is śunaḥ which is, apparently, genitive singular 161. Śuno Vāyuh śu etyantarikṣe sira ādityaḥ saraṇāt (Nir. IX. 40).

162. VI, II, p. 386.

163. Sukhena hūyate somo yair iti śunahotrāḥ pātraviṣeṣāḥ—Sāyana on RV 2.18.6. Śunahotreṣu Gr̥tsamadeṣu asmāsu (2.41.14, 17). Preface to Second Maṇḍala—Maṇḍaladrasṭā Gr̥tsamada ṛṣiḥ / Sa ca pūrvam Āngirasakule Śunahotrasya putraḥ san yajñakāle asuraḥ gr̥hīta Indreṇa mocitaḥ / Paścāt tadvacanenaiva Bṛghukule Śunaka-putro Gr̥tsamadanāmā abhūt. Tathā cānukramaṇikā—Ya Āngirasaś Śaunahotro bhūtvā bhārgavaś Śaunako bhavat sa Gr̥tsamado divittiyam maṇḍalam apaśyad iti / Tathā tasyaiva Śaunakasya vacanam R̥ṣyanukramaṇe—Tvam Agna iti Gr̥tsamadaś Śaunako Bṛghutām gataḥ / Śaunahotrāḥ prakṛtyā tu ya Āngirasa ucyate //

164. Ibid.

165. Dr. A. Venkatasubbiah in his word study argues that śunam "signifies originally priya = dear, agreeable etc., and secondarily, svīya or own. The meaning sukha assigned to it by the author of the Nighaṇṭu seems to be but an approximate equivalent of the original priya, like all approximations, not quite accurate." pp. 61-66 IA. LVI (1927). Dr. A. V. has published his essays in book form entitled "Vedic Studies," published at Devaprāsāda, Mysore.

166. Vanaspati Bṛhaspati Śacīpati Tanūnapāt Narāśamsaḥ Śunāśśēpaḥ Śaṇḍāmārkau Tr̥ṣpāvarūtrī Lambāviśvavayasau Marmṛtyuḥ iti vanaspatyādiḥ. See also VG, p. 96.

of śvan, 'dog'. It is a case, again, like śúnā-īṣita, for the aluk. But as true Vedic application demands, we should explore whether śunaḥ in this compound cannot mean or relate to happiness. In our opinion it can.

Before proceeding to elucidate this point, it would be well to discuss the other difficult member, śepa. This word is mentioned in the Nighaṇṭu along with Vaitasāḥ among 26 duets of names.¹⁶⁷ The meaning is not given.¹⁶⁸ The Nirukta explains as follows: "Sepa Vaitasa iti pumsprajananasya / Śepaś śapateḥ sprṣatikarmaṇo vaitaso vitastam bhavati //"—Śepa and vaitasa are names of man's genital organ; śepa from śap to touch and vaitasa because it is contracted.¹⁶⁹ The etymology is not supported by proper authority. Yāska was full of fancy, no doubt, but when he is likely to mislead, we have to look elsewhere. According to Uṇādi, śepa is derived from √ śī to lie down or sleep. II A with the suffixes puṭ and asun, which yields the form śepas. But the word ending in a is also found in usage as in 'prahārāma śepam'¹⁷⁰

Śepa is associated with śipi in RV 7.100. 5-6 meaning raśmi (ray) as explained by Yāska. Reminiscent of this, śepa must mean brightness or lustre:

Prā tát te adyā śipiviṣṭa náma
Aryāḥ śamsāmi vayúnāni vidvān /
Tām tvā grṇāmi tavāsam ātavyān
Kṣáyantam asyā rájasah parāké //
Kim ít te viṣṇo paricákṣyam bhūt
Prā yád vavakṣé śipiviṣṭó asmi /
Má várpo asmád ápa gūha etát
Yád anyárūpaḥ samithé babhūtha //¹⁷¹

Here śipiviṣṭa is used in two senses: (1) uncovered like the membrum virile (2) enveloped by rays.¹⁷² Now unless urged by the authority of these ancient

167. ...śepaḥ / vaitasāḥ / ...īti ṣaḍvimsatir dvīśa uttarāṅi nāmāni / Nigh. 3.29.

168. Dr. S. K. Belvalkar thinks that this and the subsequent section of Ch. III of the Nighaṇṭu are, possibly, additions by a later hand. Being mere lists of words, the supposition is that, like the words (aikapadikas) of Ch. IV, they are also 'anavagatasamskāra' words, whose make-up, significance etc. are not known. We submit that sections 29 and 30 of Ch. III may just be two lists of words which were of the nature of anavagatasamskāra appended by the first compilers themselves. Did not the original compilers of the Nighaṇṭu (say of the first three chapters) meet with difficult words at all in the Veda? —Reference AIOC II (Calcutta) S. K. Belvalkar on the Literary Strata of the Rgveda.

169. Nir. 3.21. Yāsyām uśāntaḥ prahārāma śepam (RV 10.85.37) is quoted as example. Vaitaso vitastam upakṣiṇam bhavati prāṇanusmaranāt striyāḥ—Durga.

170. Śīn svapne. Vṛśāñbhyaṃ rūpasvāṅgayoh puṭ ca / (Uṇ 640) and Sarvadhātubhyaḥ asun / (Uṇ 628). Hence Śepas. Yadyapi śepaśśabdah sakārāntaḥ gauriṅgam cilnaśepasoh ityamara-prayogāt, tathāpi śīho nipātanād auṇādike papratyaye akārāntopyastyeva /

171. Tr. "Resplendent Viṣṇu, I, the master of the offering, knowing the objects that are to be known, glorify today thy name: I, who am feeble, praise thee who art powerful, dwelling in a remote region of this world.

What is to be proclaimed, O Viṣṇu, of thee, when thou sayest, I am śipiviṣṭa? Conceal not, from us, thy real form, although thou hast engaged under a different form in battle."—Wilson.

172. Nir. 5.7-8. "Śipiviṣṭo viṣṇur iti Viṣṇor dve nāmāni bhavataḥ / Kutsitārthīyam bhavatītyaupamanyavaḥ" / Śepa iva nirveṣṭiteḥ (kutsitārthe) / Śipibhī raśmibhir āviṣṭaḥ iti vā / propounders of Vedic thought like Yāska and Aupamanyava, there is nothing by way of internal evidence in the verses just quoted to support the kutsitārtha, the low sense. It is not infrequent that some good words are abused or used in a euphemistic way to denote some indecent things in human life; the psychology is one of hearty aversion to give utterance to obscene things, e.g. the use of the word marma and pradhāna, the dialectal sense of which cannot even enter the lexicons. In the same manner it is not unlikely that an excellent word like Śipi meaning ray was abused. What harm if we restore it to its original purity and understand by śepa (śipir eva śepaḥ) a sense like ray, lustre, brilliance etc.? The point is that Śipi or śepa does not directly mean man's genital organ. It can mean other things also, specially because the older work Nighaṇṭu has abstained from specifying its meaning.

There is some support that we can find from other classical languages.¹⁷³ Compare Latin cipus, cippus and its Gk. analogue skorpos, which mean a pile, post, pillar, staff, bar, etc. In the light of this, the original significance of śepa may be taken as a pillar or a post. And, if the first member in Śunaśśepa can be understood in the sense of sukha, happiness, the whole name yields a pleasant sense, viz. a pillar of happiness—a sense which is in perfect keeping with the great idea of Deliverance for which Śunaśśepa is all the time remembered.

This meaning is possible if the compound could be construed as a tatpuruṣa: śunasya (sukhasya) śepaḥ (stambhaḥ) Śunaśśepaḥ. How to account for the sibilant in between: it ought to be Śunaśśepaḥ? This is easily accounted by Pāṇini 6.1.157 (Sk. 1073)—Pāraskaraprabhīrtiṇi ca samjñāyām / which the Siddhānta Kaumudī expands: etāni saṣuṭkāni nīpātyante nāmni / pāraskaraḥ / kiṣkindhā / tad bhṛatoḥ etc. / coradevatayor iti samudāyopādhiḥ / taskaraḥ / Bṛhaspatih / ...Vanaspatih / ityādi / ākṛtigāṇoyam /

The Tattvabodhini adds, with the flavour of a double-entendre,—ākṛtigāṇoyamiti / Tena śatāt parāṇi—paraśśatāni kāryāṇītyādi siddham /, suggesting that hundreds of such forms can be made, the word paraśśata itself being an example!

Thus the aphorism and its vārtikas declare that the instances are not limited and that on their analogy many others in usage can be comprehended. Moreover, Vanaspati (and hence Vanaspatyādi) is also added as coming within the purview of this rule. Śunaśśepa is definitely included in the *Vanaspatigāṇa*¹⁷⁴ which, while taking the double accent which is a privilege peculiar to its own group, shares other grammatical incidences also, the suḍāgama in this case. Apart from the technical rule, it is needless to stress the phonetic rationale in the expression Śunaśśepa, where the sibilant helps to step up the pronunciation from the sonant to the surd. The argumentation reaches a fine point indeed, which may, in a way, be considered unnecessary because the human element in language sometimes defies 173. K. F. Johansson's note on śepa. Indische Miszellen, IF 3.213.

174. Supra Note 166.

all rule; well, in fact it originates the rules and is unscrupulous enough to force exceptions also. The Tattvabodhinī makes a very pertinent statement under the Pāraskara-Sūtra :

Pāram karoti pāraskaraḥ, kimapi dhatte kiṣkindhā, kim kim dadhāti vā / Vastutastu rūḍhiśabdā ete kathañcid vyutpādyanta iti avayavārthe nāgrahaḥ kāryaḥ ¹⁷⁵

The words are there in language; attempts will be made to analyse and understand them; there is no point in being fastidious. Thus the word Śunaśsepa can be analysed as a tatpuruṣa-samāsa : śunasya śepaḥ, being entitled to the suḍāgama as a member of the Vanaspati group which in turn is influenced by the Pāraskara rule.

This discussion encourages us to think that the padapāṭha of Śunaśsepa is faulty and requires to be emended, from Śunaḥ-śepaḥ to Śunā-śepaḥ. This involves us in a difficulty relating to the accent of the first member. The rule, Ubhe vanaspatyādiṣu yugapat,¹⁷⁶ prescribes to the two members their own accent (ubhayapadaprakṛtiśvaratva). According to this, śuna as noun meaning happiness takes the *prātipadika-svara*¹⁷⁷ i.e. accent on the final and is so marked in the Nighaṇṭu—Śunām. But the text, has śunaḥ, the initial accent pointing to the great likelihood of its being, even originally, the gen. sing. of śvan, substantive; for in śunaḥ, the genitive, being a sup-pratyaya, is unaccented;¹⁷⁸ the accent remains on the stem.

Whereas we have sufficient ground to put up a case for the emendation of the pada-text, the emendation of the accent thereof is a natural corollary: Śunā-śepaḥ : Śunāśsepaḥ. Following the tendency of the scholiast, it is not difficult to argue for the initial accent of śuna even as a substantive. The prātipadika-svara is taken advantage of, usually, when the word defies derivation according to Śākaṭāyana (the Upādi-sūtras). Indeed this exercise is a somewhat thankless job because in great many cases the root-meaning hardly helps the semantic understanding of the word. All the same it speaks of the profound linguistic speculations of the ancient grammarians to have evolved a grammatical machinery which can dissect the word into its very elements. Therefore derive śunam from √śun, to go, VI P.¹⁷⁹ Add the suffix asun provided by "Sarvadhātubhyaḥ asun" (Up. 628); we get the form śunas which has the initial accent,¹⁸⁰ meaning, movement, 175. The first sentence is an epitome of the com., the second is a quotation. See SK. with Tattvabodhinī etc. (Nirṇayasāgar, Bombay 1942), p. 221 (Sk. 1079).

176. Sk. 3871 (P. VI.2.40)

177. Phī I 1 following Sk. 3704. "Phīṣonta udāttaḥ"

178. Sk. 3706 (P. III 1.4) "anudāttau suppitau."

179. Dhā. 1423 Śuna gatau (tu. pa.se) (Sk. NS edn. p. 410). Dhā 1337 acc. BORI (Chitrav. Pāṭhak). What a wide difference in the enumeration of the roots, almost to a hundred. Such differences are found in the Aṣṭādhyāyī and the Siddhānta Kaumudī also from publication to publication. A standard edition of all these works which are indispensable to every scholar is a great desideratum.

180. SK. 3683 (P. VI 1.197) ānityādir nityam.

progress, prosperity, happiness. Further, Śūnasah śepah Śūnaśśēpah, which explanation has not got to invoke the suḍāgama at all!¹⁸¹ Why not prefer this explanation which agrees with the given accent of the Vedic Text? It is for the simple reason that a certain Vedic tradition had already a word like śunām meaning happiness and on the analogy of other Vedic words like Brhaspati, Śūnaśśēpa also could be more authoritatively explained.

There is a further important clue in this logical procedure which led us to venture on an emendation of the Pada-text and through that—may the Gods forgive!—on a slight change of accent in the Saṁhitā also. Here is a basis for some conjecture which is in no way idle. That we have interfered with the authenticity or exactitude of the pada-pāṭha need cause no surprise. The pada-pāṭha is not infallible, as shown long ago by Yāska himself—

(a) Commenting on RV 5.39.1. (yādindra citra mehanāsti) Yāska says—Yad Indra citram cāyanīyam mamhaniyam dhanam asti / Yan ma iha nāstīti vā trīṇi madhyamāni padāni /¹⁸² Durga, in support, adds :—Bahyreṇām mehanā ityekam padam / Chandogānām trīṇyētāni padāni “ma iha na” iti / The divergence of the Pada and Saṁhitā pāṭhas is thus borne out by the evidence of the Sāmaveda. Durga further characterises this “mehanā” as one of the anavagatas¹⁸³ ‘not understood’, of the vibhāgānavagata type i.e. words whose division is not definitely known.

(b) The svarānavagata, an expression which raises difficulty of accent, has resulted in an erroneous pada-pāṭha e.g. in *Vāne nā vāyo nyadhāyi cākān¹⁸⁴ RV 10.29.1. Commenting on this, Yāska says :—Vana iva vāyo veḥ putras cāyanīti vā kāmaya māna iti vā / veti ca ya iti ca cakāra Śākalyah / Udāttam tvevam ākhyātam abhaviṣyat asusamāptaś cārthah /—Śākalya has analysed vāyah into vā and yah : then the finite verb would have had the accent¹⁸⁵ and the sense would have been incomplete.

(c) We have now added the case of Śūnaśśēpa. It is our belief that the story of Śūnaśśēpa, as given in AB, was current with its component parts developed, by the time Śākalya formulated the pada-pāṭha; and that Śākalya, while he pieced together the Saṁhitā and provided the division into words (śakala = bits), very probably exercised the liberties of an editor and exponent. This circumstance

181. Śūnas and Śunam may both be admissible like śepas and śepa as adverted to above. Words that end in -a as well as -s are not uncommon, e.g. nabham, nabhas; tapam, tapas; saham, sahas; maham, mahas; tamam, tamas; rajam, rajas.—from Dvirūpa-kośa quoted by Tattvabodhini on Up. 628 (p. 360 Sk. NS Edn. 1942).

182. Nir. IV 4. (p. 360 BSS Vol. I).

183. The anavagatasamśkāras are of ten kinds. That is, the words offer difficulties in the way of understanding a text in ten ways. Padajāti-abhidheya-svara-samśkāra-guṇa-vibhāga-krama-vikṣepa-adhyāhāra-vyavadhānāni / Teṣu cābhidheyam apekṣya nirvacanam kartavyam / See pp. 337-338 Nīruktā-Bhāṣakamkar—I. BSS.

184. Nir. VI 28. See pp. 690, 693, Bhāṣakamkar I (BSS).

185. P. VIII 1,66 (Sk. 3970) Yadvṛttānītyam. Durga has fully explained the discrepancy of the pada-pāṭha. “Etasmin nigame padavibhāgagataḥ kaścid vicāroṣti tam āha bhāṣyakārah etc. etc.” p. 693.

lends support to the view that RV 1.24.12-13 are a later interpolation, probably by Śākalya, which hypothesis we submitted in the early part of this essay. RV 5.2.6 "Śūnās cicchēpam" must be regarded as an anavagatasamskāra of the vikṣepānavagata type i.e. words whose separation into parts becomes unintelligible.¹⁸⁶

(d) Many a verse from the Rgveda we find repeated in the other Saṁhitās. In this process, many variae lectiones will reveal themselves. In dealing with RV 3.31.6, in the previous chapter, we recorded a number of v.1.¹⁸⁷ between RV, MS and TB. Some v.1. are found in AV also (cf. RV 4.57.8 with AV 3.17.5, for instance). This fact is cited just to reconcile oneself to the fact that the most wonderfully accurate transmission of the Vedic texts withal, a few variations or even pitfalls here and there—utterly negligible, indeed, in proportion to the huge mass of literature—may be discovered; it may not be sin to know them! Even so with the pada-pāṭha.

One more point before concluding this investigation. Śunaśśepa is also written with aspiration as Śunaśśepha. This is a post-Vedic phonetic change only, perhaps contributed by the Gauda country. We find the pha in Gorresio's text of Rām. Wilson has adopted that spelling in his translation of the Viṣṇu Purāṇa (quarto) and opines that is the 'usually written form,'¹⁸⁸ which statement reminds us of his long stay in Calcutta. The English translations of Purāṇic texts from Bengal adopt the pha while the Vedic texts of the BI series stick to the original form, pa. Yet, some etymological reflection may not be undue. Śepha is reminiscent of Śīpha or Śīphā, just as Śepa is of Śīpi. Śīphā, or Śīphā-kanda according to Amarasimha, means fibre, stalk, or fibrous root.¹⁸⁹ Monier Williams records both m. and f. forms of the word, meaning fibrous root or root in general. Even this dialectal change helps the understanding of śepha in a good sense: thus śunasya sukhasya śepho mūlam, 'the root of happiness'. Śunaśśepha of the story became that to the Aryan folk after the great Deliverance.

The orthography of Śunaśśepa requires mention. It is most commonly written as Śunaḥśepa; in devanāgarī script also, with a visarga after Śuna. If this practice is meant to remind ourselves of the aluk, it is indeed scholarly precision. In our humble opinion, the phonetic delicacy is thereby disregarded; try to pronounce as it is written—writing, we hope, is meant to follow pronunciation; then, we see the rigidity of the canon or of our understanding thereof. Even granting the aluk, what precludes the visarga from colaesing with the succeeding sibilant? Double ś is not at all hard to pronounce being a breathed sound; it only requires 186. See Durga on p. 358 already cited. e.g. "dyāvā naḥ prthivī" iti yathā cf. BD 2.115 which recommends the order of words according to their sense—"arthād āsīt kramo yathā," giving a third example narā vā śamsam. Cf. RV Pr. 2.43.

187. Notes 18, 22 and 24.

188. Note on RV 1.24 in his translation of RV Vol. I, p. 59 of the original edition. Moreover, he persists in writing the word as sakārānta, Śunaḥśepas, which is a fad similar to his Viśwadevas, not Viśvedevas! Such instances are not uncommon among scholars in general.

189. Karahāṭas śīphākandaḥ kīṇjalkaḥ keśaro'striyām / a little more breath ! On the other hand, imagine the convulsions in the resonance chamber when we pronounce the visarga followed by the first sibilant ś, the two to be pronounced as distinct sounds. It is to avoid this strain on the vocal organs that rules like the Pāraskara one are conceived. It will be equally just to respect 'Pāraskaraprabhṛtini' (Sk. 1073) in this case ; and the famous maxim about coalescence :

Samhitaikapade nityā nityā dhātūpasargayoḥ /
nityā samāse vākye tu sā vivakṣām apekṣate //

Rv Prātiśākhya clinches the whole issue when it says that the visarga before a breathed conjunct consonant is wrong and definitely gives the correct form as Śunaśśepa [saṁyogāder ūṣmaṇaḥ pūrvam āhur visarjaniyam adhikam svaropadhāt/¹⁹⁰]

The current orthography of words like Śamkara and alamkāra urges comment, but we must desist out of deference to the revered teachers. Liberty is nobody's monopoly, yet it is everybody's first claim !

To sum up :

(a) The ugliness of the name Śunaśśepa and of the antecedents of his personality are a later fancy, dating, possibly, even from the time of the pada-pāṭha. Its original significance points to Śunaśśepa being a 'pillar of happiness.'¹⁹⁰

(b) The pada-pāṭha of the word Śunaśśepaḥ, given as Śunaḥśepaḥ, reminding us of the aluksamāsa and also of the first member being the gen. sing. of Śvan, is defective. An emendation thereof as Śuna-śepaḥ is not illogical.^{190a}

(c) With a little shifting of the accent, the emendation will be better as Śunaśśepaḥ in the samhita-pāṭha and Śunā-śepaḥ in the pada.

(d) The pada-pāṭha is not infallible as proved by the ancient exponent of the Veda, Yāska, whose criticism of its author Śākalya is marked by a peculiar candour, which warrants a supposition that the pada-kāra was not far anterior of the Nirukta-kāra.

(e) The word Śunaśśepa came to have an aspiration at the end (Śunaśśepha), as a dialectal peculiarity, found in the regions of Bengal.

(f) The orthography of the word Śunaśśepa requires proper appreciation. Śunaśśepa is the correct form, whereas Śunaḥśepa is wrong, unscientific and pretentious.

190. Compare the expression. He is a tower of strength.

190a RV Prāti. XIV 33 and 36. ed. and trans. by Dr. Mangal Deva Sastri in 3 vols. Vols. II and III are published (Allahabad and Lahore) 1931, 1937. Cf. Uvaṭa's explanation of sūtra 33. Svaropadhāt saṁyogāder ūṣmaṇaḥ pūrvam adhikam visarjaniyam āhuh / sa doṣo varjyah / Again on 36. Śunaśśepaḥ, Niṣṣapī etc. ityete'vikramā bhavanti / Eteṣu vikramo visarjaniyah sa doṣo varjyah / Śunaśśepaḥ (RV I 24.12) etc.

XI

SUMMARY

1. The story of Śunaśśepa's deliverance¹⁹¹ is a Vedic fact. According to one Seer, Śunaśśepa was saved from a thousand-fold stake by Agni (RV 5.2.7) while another singer praises Varuṇa for having freed him from his bonds (1.24.12,13). Śunaśśepa himself is one among the centurion seers (śatarcins : seers of hundred verses) to whom is attributed the revelation of the first maṇḍala of the R̥gveda.

2. The other Saṁhitās know him as seized by Varuṇa (varuṇa-grhīta) and then freed on praising him with RV 1.24.15 (Ūduttamām), which is a very favourite prayer to Varuṇa, in almost all the Saṁhitās, that he might graciously release the worshipper from his threefold pāśa, at the head, in the middle and at the bottom. This stanza in later times inspired a philosophic interpretation, that it was an appeal for freedom from worldly ties.

3. It is the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa (7.13-18) that spins a complete narrative of the legend. It is repeated, with slight difference only, by the Śāṅkhāyana Śrauta Sūtra. The central theme of Śunaśśepa's escape from sacrificial immolation has been linked at the beginning and at the end to two other episodes. The introductory link is provided by Hariścandra and his son Rohita whose entanglement with God Varuṇa brings about the main event of sacrificing Śunaśśepa. The concluding link is provided by Viśvāmitra, the universal friend, to whose family Śunaśśepa after release is adopted as the eldest son inheriting both regal authority and divine lore from the adoptive father. The narrative is a mixture of the Brāhmaṇic prose and the popular gāthā. It has been supposed that the legend perhaps existed in the form of a ballad even before AB.

4. Works like the Sarvānukramṇī which are but ancillaries to the Veda repeat the story as given in AB. The famous commentators, Śaṅguruṣiṣya and Sāyana and their ditto Dyaṁ Dviveda scrupulously follow AB and show no influence of the other version of the story, though it was positively current in their times.

5. In later literature, the two epics, the Harivaṁśa and Vāyu Purāṇa present a different version of the story, which is believed to reflect the popular account of it. The Brāhma, Bhāgavata and Devī Bhāgavata repeat the Aitareya, herein called the orthodox version, with slight innovations here and there which reflect the local taste and temperament in their respective ages.

6. The Legend of Śunaśśepa provides good scope for sociological study in successive stages. The eager theorist can suspect cannibalism and human sacrifice once upon a time. Sale of children and eating dog's flesh are indications of the extent to which poverty could drive the people. Manu absolves the ancient ṛṣis of the taint of crime nevertheless.¹⁹² The theory of the prevalence of human sacrifice is rejected by almost all scholars. It is provided for in some sociological texts to give the stamp of perfection to the theoretical structure of sacrifice. The Śunaśśepa Legend is a protest against human sacrifice which the Aryans found prevalent in the land, when they arrived from the north-western regions. The Indus Valley experts have unearthed evidence to think that human sacrifice prevailed as a custom in the age envisaged by the finds.

191. It was stated above that the Legend of Śunaśśepa was prescribed to be recited at the Coronation ceremony of Kings. W. H. Robinson states that this corresponds to the precise point where a copy of the Holy Bible is presented by Bishops to the British Sovereigns when crowned at Westminster. (See 'The Golden Legend of India or the story of India's god-given Cynosure' by W. H. Robinson, Luzac & Co., London, 1911).

7. A study of the name Śunaśśepa has been presented in detail in an attempt to inquire whether the name was, in the time of RV, of an uncomplimentary significance. It has been possible to establish that it could have signified worthily, a "pillar of happiness" in consonance with the great idea of Deliverance for which Śunaśśepa's name is immortalised. Śunaḥpuccha and Śunolāṅgūla are spurious names, and the concept of the 'middle one,' to propound which only these names were conceived, is psychologically unsound and, what is more, prone to inculcate unethical ideas into credulous minds. Incidentally, the infallibility of the pada-pāṭha and its hoary antiquity within the Vedic Age have become matters of doubt. Human nature being the same always, the sacred texts seem to be no exception to the falterings of transmission through the holiest agencies of old, the Ṛṣis and the Ācāryas.

192. Ajigartas sutam hantum upāsarpad bubhuḥṣitah / na cālipyata pāpena kṣatpratīkāram ācaran // (MS 10.105)

CHAPTER III

VASISTHA AND VIŚVĀMITRA

VASISTHA and VIŚVĀMITRA are among the foremost seers of the R̥gveda. They are regarded as having seen entire Maṇḍalas (maṇḍaladraṣṭāraḥ), the seventh (104 hymns) and the third (62 hymns) respectively. There have been innumerable references to the two sages in Sanskrit Literature, ancient and modern. Much has been written also about them by Orientalists of the past and present century. Nothing new and sensational can be unearthed now. The purpose of this study is mainly to unravel the problem of the ancient feud between Vasiṣṭha and Viśvāmitra and understand their mutual relationship in its true perspective. Let us first know what our most ancient authority, the R̥gveda, has to say about them, comment and criticism being put off to a later section of the chapter. For the sake of convenience, we just invert the order and deal with Viśvāmitra first. In the R̥gvedic compilation, Viśvāmitra's is the earlier maṇḍala. It is but accidental, carrying absolutely no significance of relative superiority. It is not a case for the maxim 'abhyarhītam pūrvam'!

I

R̥GVEDA

(A) VIŚVĀMITRA—

There are eight contexts in RV in which the name of Viśvāmitra occurs¹ :— curiously, all grammatical cases are represented except the accusative.

1. Viśvāmitro yād āvahat Sudāsam III 53.9
2. Viśvāmitrāya dādato maghāni III 53.7
3. Viśvāmitrasya rakṣati III 53.12.
4. Viśvāmitrā arāsata III 53.13.
5. Viśvāmitrā utā ta Indra nūnām X 89.17.
6. Viśvāmitrebhir idhyate ājasraḥ III 1.21.
7. Revād Agne Viśvāmitreṣu śām yóḥ III 18.4.
8. Prāti Viśvāmitra-Jamadagnī dāme X 167.4.

(1) Mahān ṛṣir devajā devājūtó'stabhnāt śíndhūm arṇavām nṛcákṣāḥ /

Viśvānūtro yād āvahat Sudāsam āpriyāyata Kuśikébhir
Índraḥ // (III 53.9).

1. Consult Max Müller's Indices attached to the third and fourth volumes of the first Edition, also Bloomfield's Vedic Concordance.

Translation—

Great Ṛṣi, heaven-born, (he) favoured of the gods, leader of men, stopped the river in floods. When (such a) Viśvāmitra steered Sudās through, Indra was pleased with the Kuśikas.

- (2) Imé Bhojá Āṅgirasō virūpāh
Divāsputrāso āsurasya virāḥ /
Viśvāmitrāya dādato maghāni
Sahasrasāvē prātiranta āyuh // III 53.7.

Translation—

These Bhojas,² these various Āṅgirasas, and these heroic sons of mighty heaven indeed, increase my life, by bestowing on me riches in this thousand-offer-sacrifice.

- (3) Yā imé ródasī ubhé
ahām indram ātuṣṭavam
Viśvāmitrasya rakṣati
Brāhmedām Bhāratam jānam // III 53.12.

Translation—

I have made these Heaven and Earth extol Indra, and (surely) this prayer of Viśvāmitra protects the Bhārata³ race.

- (4) Viśvāmitrā arāsata
Brāhméndrāya vajriṇe /
Kārad innah surādhasah // III 53.13.

Translation—

The Viśvāmitras have addressed a prayer to Indra, the wielder of the thunderbolt. He will indeed make us very opulent.

- (5) Evā te vayām Indra bhuñjatinām
Vidyāma sumatinām nāvānām /
Vidyāma vāstor āvasā grṇānto
Viśvāmitrā utā ta Indra nūnām // X 89.17.

Translation—

May we, O Indra, the descendants⁴ of Viśvāmitra, sincerely praising you through the day for protection, obtain thy protecting (favours), may we obtain thy recent (favours).

- (6) Jānmañjanman nihoto⁵ jātāvedāḥ
Viśvāmitrebhir idhyate ājasrah /
Tāsyā vayām sumataṁ yajñīyasya
Āpi bhadré saumanasé syāma // III 1.21.

2. Bhojas not mentioned among the manuṣya-names of the Nighaṇṭu (II.3) as for instance the Turvaśas, Druhyas, Yadus etc.

3. According to Nighaṇṭu III 18 Bharatāḥ (Bhāratāḥ) and Kuravaḥ are among the eight Rtvic-names: Bhāratam Bharata-kulam janam rakṣati—Sāyaṇa.

4. The Viśvāmitras who figure in this mandala are Ṛsabha, Kata, Utkila Kātya, Gāthīn Kauśika, Devaśravas and Devavāta (Bhāratam), Prajāpati Vaiśvāmītra. Outside this mandala, Madhucchandas Vaiśvāmītra appears in the first (RV I 1-10) with his son Jetā (RV I 11); Renu appears in the tenth (RV X 89), so also Aṣṭaka (X 104), Purāṇa (X 160) and Aghamarṣaṇa Mādhu-ccandasa (X 90).

5. Janman-janman sarveṣu manuṣyesu nihito Jātavedāḥ // Sāyaṇa.

Translation—

The sacred fire (Jātavedas) is indeed kept by every man, but the Viśvāmitras kindle him ever more. May we, who already enjoy his favour, ever be in the good books of that adorable (deity) !

- (7) Ūcchociṣā sahasasputra⁶ stutāḥ
 Bṛhād vāyaḥ śaśamāneṣu dhehi /
 Revād Agne Viśvāmitreṣu śām yōḥ
 Marmṛjmā te tanvām bhūri krtvaḥ //
 (Seer Kata) III 18.4.

Translation—

Arise, O son of strength, as you are praised. Confer abundant food and wealth upon us, the Viśvāmitras who praise you. Grant us exemption from sickness and danger. We shall, O Energiser Agni, sprinkle your person profusely (with ghee, butter, milk etc.).

- (8) Prāsūto bhakṣām akaram carāvāpi
 Stómam cemām prathamāḥ sūrīr ūmrje /
 Suté sāténa yadyāgaman vām
 Prāti Viśvāmitra-Jamadagni dāme // X 167.4.

Translation—

Inspired by you, I have prepared the food with the caru (also), and as chief worshipper, I fashion this hymn of praise. (Indra replies) Yes, O Viśvāmitra and Jamadagni, as the Soma is being pressed in your sacrificial home, I will come with gifts (then, you will offer me the hymn).

The above references are adequate enough to give us a sketch of the sage Viśvāmitra of the Ṛgveda. He is a great ṛṣi, god's favourite and wonder-worker. His connection with Sudās, the Bhojas and the Bharatas has been expressed. He has the co-operation and regard of other priests, Jamadagni, Aṅgirasas and the Maruts. His was the leading part as priest at a thousand-offer-sacrifice (III 53.7). He wielded great influence as he made heaven and earth extol Indra and was confident that his prayer to that Deity would ensure protection to his disciples the Bharatas. He is not less efficient in composing beautiful hymns, hearing which the gods, specially Indra, would shower bounty upon him and his followers. Finally, his descendants, the Viśvāmitras, have kept up the great tradition set up by him. They continue to be Indra's favourites, for one of them invokes Indra as a Kauśika (I 10.11). As the seer Reṇu says, the Viśvāmitras always enjoy the favours of Indra.

6. The pada-pāṭha divides this into two words sahasaḥ and putra, but both have lost accent apparently on account of "āmantritasya ca" (Pāṇini VIII 1.19), though 'sahasah' being in the genitive cannot come under that rule. The sarvānudātta will apply to it only if it is regarded as one with 'putra.' Could it be one word like Vācaspati?

The wonderful achievement of Viśvāmitra, referred to above (III 53.9), is the subject of an entire hymn viz. III. 33. It is in the shape of a dialogue between Viśvāmitra and the Rivers, at the confluence of the Vipāś and Śutudrī (Beas and Sutlej). The sage prays to the Rivers to become fordable for him and his royal patron Sudās and his retinue. The Rivers feel flattered of course by his prayer, but do not comply because they have had to obey a higher Power. But Viśvāmitra's repeated appeal in fulsome words moves them in the end to oblige him.

RV III 53 is an important hymn giving us the personal history of Viśvāmitra in another episode viz. the conduct of the Horse-sacrifice (aśvamedha) on behalf of the Bharatas. This part of the hymn constitutes very good poetry. Viśvāmitra entreats Indra to stay at the sacrifice, not to go away: entreats him as a son entreats the father by holding the skirts of his garment. Then he calls upon the Adhvaryu to join in the reception, commends the soma-offer through the favourite liaison Agni, feels much gratified at his officiating at the Aśvamedha; the Bhojas, the Aṅgīrasas and the Maruts honour him. He then draws inspiration through his earlier deeds of glory, viz. the crossing of the Rivers and helping Sudās's sacrifice whereby he elevated himself in the estimation of Indra. And he further encourages the Kuśikas to praise more and drink more along with the great gods. Surely, the wielder of the thunderbolt, Indra, to whom the Viśvāmitras have offered praise, will make them affluent. In stanza 14, the great sage switches on to a different strain, as is not unnatural for a man in power for the time being. It is a famous verse, which has drawn the attention of scholars⁷ especially regarding Vedic geography—

Kīm te kṛvanti Kīkaṭeṣu gāvo
Nāśīram duhré nā tapanti gharmām /
Ā no bhara prāmagandasya védo
Naicāśākhām maghavan randhayā naḥ // III 53.14.

Translation—

What will the cattle do for you in the Kīkaṭa country? They do not draw milk for preparing the soma, nor do they heat the 'gharma' (a sacrificial vessel) with milk in it. Bring us the wealth of Pramaganda as well as the holdings of the Nicaśākha.

It is not impossible that there is some sarcasm behind this utterance of Viśvāmitra directed against his enemies. It is the business of Indra to go to any person that praises, here Indra is dissuaded from such a solicitude: what will they do for you in a damned, unmentionable, (Kīkaṭa is a harsh enough name, by the way) out of the way place, those cattle (gāvaḥ in the sense of paśu) i.e. barbarous people? They make no offering, perform no rite. They are usurers and of low birth. Carry away their wealth for us, O Indra. Such is the venom that Viśvāmitra is capable of pouring against the enemy.

7 See "Kīkaṭa in RK-Samhitā" by K. C. Chattopadhyaya, Allahabad, in the Woolner Commemoration Volume, Lahore. Stating all previous conclusions on the subject Dr. Chattopadhyaya says Kīkaṭa is Kurukṣetra and not Magadha as some other scholars have said. cf. VI 1 p. 159.

The next two verses of the hymn (III 53.15-16) are indicative of Viśvāmitra's discomfiture on one occasion. Viśvāmitra became a victim of unconsciousness (amati); then the Sasarpārī (trumpet-like sound) given out by Jamadagni restored him. Sasarpārī put new life into Viśvāmitra.

The last four verses of the hymn are the notorious Vasiṣṭha-dveṣiṇyaḥ alleged to be imprecations against Vasiṣṭha. Durgācārya, being a Kāpiṣṭhala Vāsiṣṭha, refuses to comment on them (com. Nir. IV 14.2). In point of fact, these are expressions of hatred and raillery against an enemy in general; he is not specified as this or that person. The learned people never care to ridicule the ignorant. Surely people would not put forward an ass to compete with a horse. "May he who hates us be downfallen and may his vital breath abandon him whom we hate." Still worse, he 'heats (the enemy) like an axe and cuts him like a Śimbala tree'; (the enemy) 'vomits foam like a seething and overboiling cauldron.'⁸

(B) VASIṢṬHA

The word Vasiṣṭha has been used in the R̥gveda no less than fifty times. On a few occasions only (II 9.1, VII 1.8, X 15.8, 95.17) it is used as an adjective meaning best, excellent (vasumattama, vāsaitṛtama). The other references are sufficient to present a concrete sketch of the personality of Vasiṣṭha and the achievements of himself and his followers. The greatest deed of Vasiṣṭha is the success which he brought to Sudās in the famous Battle of the Ten Kings (Dāśarājña) (VII 18; 33), on which occasion, he also, like Viśvāmitra, persuaded the River Paruṣṇī to leave way to his disciple Sudās. Vasiṣṭha became the family priest of the Bharatas and the people of the Tr̥tsus prospered (VII 33.6). He was able to lure Indra away from the Soma drink at Pāśadyumna's sacrifice, to the sacrifice which he himself was conducting (VII 33.2). He was equally the favourite of other gods. The Aśvins helped him out of a fix, though the occasion is not specified (I 112.9). Varuṇa gave him a lift on his ship (VII 88.3 and 4). The birth of the sage Vasiṣṭha has been stated, but unfortunately, not in clear terms (VII 33.10-14); he was born of the Apsaras Urvaśī by Mitra and Varuṇa at a sacrifice. Sāyaṇa believes in the repeated births of Vasiṣṭha (VII 33.9).

Professor Velankar⁹ has pointed out, in an admirable article, how in each "Family-book" (maṇḍala), certain hymns can be marked out as 'family-hymns' i.e. hymns which describe the family history and glory of the seer of the maṇḍala. This invests the poetry of the R̥gveda with a stamp of concreteness and realism. A hymn of praise to a god, whom we cannot see, would otherwise, be airy nothing.

8. JUB (1935) "Hymns to Indra by the Viśvāmitras" Tr. with annotations by Prof. H. D. Velankar. Arts. pp. 42-48. The notes are copious and provide a rare advantage to the student of knowing through them the opinions expressed by the celebrated German interpreters of the Veda like Pischel, Geldner and Oldenberg.

9. JBBRAS 1942, pp. 1-22. "Family-hymns in the Family-maṇḍalas" by Prof. H. D. Velankar. They are RV III 33 and 53, IV 18, V 40, VI 47, VII 18, 33. No family hymn is yet traced in the II (Gr̥tsamada) Maṇḍala. According to Geldner (cited by Prof. Velankar), only III 53, VI 47, and VII 33 were pointed out as family hymns.

Now it is possible to get a brief, yet clear enough, sketch of some of the great Vedic personalities. The history and geography of Vedic India glimmer here and there, lighting up at least a few patches of time and space. The history of the sages, for instance, can be traced to two to three generations if not more. Thus among the Viśvāmitras we can trace three: Viśvāmitra-Madhuechandas-Jetā, Viśvāmitra-Kata-Utkīla. So among the Vasiṣṭhas: Vasiṣṭha-Śakti-Parāśara etc. Even so the great rivers of the Punjab and Madhyadeśa. Peoples and principalities like the Bharatas, the Trtsus, the Purus, the Pañcajanas and the Kīkaṭas etc. have a historical reality about them. Yet we are warned not to suppose that these family-hymns were made to design. They are but accidental and reflect what was in vogue in Vedic society—viz. that each family cherished the glory of its ancestors.

The family-hymns of the Vasiṣṭhas are pointed out to be two, i.e. VII 18 and 33. The main theme of the eighteenth hymn is the Battle of the Ten Kings which is described in detail. There does not seem to be much action or melee in the Battle. King Sudās had after all a small army and he was almost to be routed as the enemy hosts hemmed in on three sides, with the powerful Paruṣṇī threatening the rear. The alternative was either to fight with the enemy straight and take the consequences or to perish in the river stream. At this crucial moment Vasiṣṭha's prayer to Indra brought about Sudās's success. By his persuasive hymns (which are not given as in the case of Viśvāmitra) the River Paruṣṇī rendered herself shallow enough for the armies to cross over and by the time the enemies pursued, the stream swelled to its original volume and velocity so that the rank and file of the enemy were simply washed down marking several furrows on the surface of the stream. The few that succeeded in swimming across were easily destroyed by Sudās. The description which is highly poetic, with subtle irony to embellish it may be illustrated, by a few verses quoted below.¹⁰

Ārṇāmsi cit paprathānā Sudāsa
 Īndro gādhānyakṛṇot supārā /
 Śārdhantam Śimyuṁ ucāthasya nāvyaḥ
 Śāpam sīndhūnām akrṇod āśastib // VII 18.5.

"Indra made even the vastly flowing waters of (the Paruṣṇī) shallow and easily fordable to King Sudās. He who is fit to be honoured by our hymn made the arrogant Śimyu and his imprecations the floating dirt (on the surface) of the River."

Puroḷā it Turvāśo yāksur āsīt
 Rāyē mātsyāśo nīṣitā āpīva /
 Śruṣṭīm cakrur Bhṛgavo Druhyāvaś ca
 Sākhā sākhāyam atarad viśūcoḥ // -6

"Turvaśa, the sacrificer, himself became the cake-offering; and so were also the Matsyas, who thought as if they were specially fitted for receiving wealth! The

10. The translations are generally from Prof. Velankar's JBBRAS 1942.

Bhrgus and the Druhyus followed them obediently ! In (each of) the two adjacent streams of the fleeing foes, a friend did help another friend (to save his life) ! "11

Durādhyo Āditim sreṇvāyanto
 'cētāso vī jagrbhre Pāruṣṇīm /
 Mahnāvivyak prthivīm pātyamānaḥ
 Paśūṣkavīr aśayaccāyamānaḥ // -8

"Those ignorant fools of impious thoughts divided the stream of the Paruṣṇī, trying to make the freely moving river go astray ! (And then) the poet (of the enemy) lay down as a victim (following the cake-offering), looking steadfastly (because dead !) and stretched himself over the earth in full length, thus mastering it ! "12

Iyūr ārtham nā nyarthām Pāruṣṇīm
 Āśūs canéd abhipitvām jagāma /
 Sudāsa Īndras sutūkā amitrān
 Ārandhayan mānuṣe vādhivācaḥ // -9

"They went to the Paruṣṇī to meet with a disaster like one who goes to meet a goal. Even the swift (horse) could not reach the resting-place, i.e. the camp. For the sake of Sudās, Indra subdued the gracefully (?) retreating enemies of impotent words among men."

Iyūr gāvo nā yāvasād āgopāḥ
 Yathākṛtām abhī mitrām citāsaḥ /
 Pṛṣṇigāvaḥ pṛṣṇinipreṣitāsaḥ
 Śruṣṭīm cakrur niyūto rāntayaś ca // -10

"They went away like cows without a keeper, (when driven out) from the pasture, collecting themselves around a friend whom they could possibly secure ; they were sent down to the earth (by Indra) to possess cows in the form of the earth ! their horses and enjoyments obediently followed them there !"

Ēkam ca yó vimśatīm ca śravasyā
 Vaikarṇāyor jānān rājā nyāstaḥ /
 Dasmó ná sādman ní śiśāti barhiḥ
 Śúraḥ sárgam akr̥ṇod Īndra eṣām // -11

11. The whole trend is ironical, cruelly, as Prof. Velankar puts it. Prof. Velankar's interpretation is quite original. Although differing totally from Sāyaṇa whose com. here, to be frank, cannot help us to get a concrete and cogent picture of the fight, the Professor has hit off a brilliant idea by taking puroḷāḥ in the sense of puroḷāśa (purodāśa), 'cake-offering.' (puroḷāḥ puroḷāśa purodātā vā : Sāyaṇa !). Puroḷāḥ is, perhaps, to be taken as a Nairukta abbreviation of purodāśa. Helplessly does Wilson remark : 'The legend, such as it is, is very obscurely told.' (RV Tr. Vol. 4, p. 57 n2)

12. The last line of the verse is, again, ironical. Prof. Velankar takes cāyamāna as an adjective while Sāyaṇa considers it a patronymic. The word occurs twice in the Bharadvāja Maṇḍala (VI 27.5 and 8) referring to Abhyāvartin, a king of that name. In that context, Prof. Velankar construes the word as a patronymic, "Abhyāvartin Cāyamāna." Vide JUB Sep. 1941 (Vol. X, part 2) pp. 97 and 109. cf. VI 1 p. 260.

"King (Sudās) cut up his enemies like a lovely priest who cuts down the grass for a sacrificial seat, when he overthrew the 21 peoples of the two Vikarṇas with a desire for fame. Brave Indra brought about their flight."

Vī sadyó viśvā dṛmhitānyeṣām
 Īndraḥ pūras sáhāsā saptá dardah /
 Vyānavasya Tṛtsave gáyam bhāḥ
 Jēśma Pūrūm vidátthe mṛdhrāvācam // -13

"In a moment did Indra batter down with force all the seven forts and other strong places of these i.e. the enemies. He gave away the wealth of the Anu prince to the Tṛtsu priest; we have conquered the Pūru prince who had used insolent words in the sacrificial assembly."

Ní gavyávó'navo Druhyávaś ca
 Śaṣṭīḥ śatá suṣupuh śāt saháśrā /
 Śaṣṭīr vírāso ádhí śāḍ duvoyú
 Viśvéd Īndrasya víriā kṛtāni // -14

"The loot-seeking Anus and the Druhyus numbering sixty hundred and six thousand respectively, lay down in eternal slumber. (But) the brave warriors (on our side) were (only) sixty and six more, (who did the same) to render service (to Indra). Even all these brave deeds were the performances of Indra."

Ardhām vírāśya śṛtapām anindrām
 Pārā śárdhantam nunude abhí kṣām /
 Īndro manyúm manyumio mimāya
 Bhejé pathó vartanīm pátyamānaḥ // -16

"King Sudās drove down to the ground that enemy who was only a half warrior, who drank the sacrificial food himself, who had no faith in Indra and who was an arrogant person. Indra destroyed the fury of him who struck with fury. He distributed paths (to men), being the Lord of the Way."

Imām naro marutaḥ saścatānu
 Dívodāsam ná pitāram Sudāsaḥ /
 Aviṣṭānā Paijavanāśya kētam
 Dūṇāsam kṣatrām ajāram duvoyú // -25

"Oh, valiant Maruts wait upon this king as you did upon Divodāsa, the ancestor of Sudās. In a helpful manner, favour the heart's desire of Paijavana and also his sovereign rule which is indestructible and never grows old."

The other family hymn,¹³ VII 33, sings the glory of the Vasiṣṭhas in general and also refers to the birth of the patriarch in particular: The opening verse is impressive—

Śvityāñco mā dakṣinatáskapardāḥ
 Dhīyamjinvāso abhí hí pramandúḥ /
 Uttiṣṭhan voce pári barhíṣo nṇ ná me dūrād ávitave Vasiṣṭhāḥ // VII 33.1.

13. It appears quite meet to call this a family hymn, for it is borne out by the ṛṣi and devatā thereof. Of the first nine verses, Vasiṣṭha is the Ṛṣi, the sons are the devatā, for the remaining six, he is the deity and the sons are the Ṛṣis. It is also regarded as a samvāda between Indra and Vasiṣṭha. cf. Sarvā. (ed. Macdonell, p. 25) Śvityāñcaḥ śajūnā samstavo Vasiṣṭhasya saputrasya Indreṇa vā samvādaḥ /

"The white-robed sages with the knot of their hair to the right have greatly delighted me by stirring up my heart. (When I heard their hymn) I got up from my grass-seat and said to the men around: "The Vasiṣṭhas are not to be favoured by me from a distance."

Dūrād Īndram anayannā sutēna
Tiró Vaiśantām āti pāntam ugrām /
Pāśadyumnasya Vāyatāsyā sōmāt
Sutād Īndro avṛṇitā Vasiṣṭhān // -2

"They brought Indra to themselves from afar by means of their pressed juice, away from Vaiśanta and in spite of the fierce Pānta!¹⁴ (Similarly) Indra chose his Vasiṣṭhas (and went to them), leaving aside even the pressed juice of Pāśadyumna Vāyata."

Evén nú kam sīndhum ebhis tatāra
Evén nú kam Bhedām eblir jaghāna /
Evén nú kam Dāśarājñé Sudāsam
Prāvad Īndro brāhmanā vo Vasiṣṭhāḥ // -3

"Thus did he cross the river Paruṣṇī with them; thus did he kill Bheda with them. Thus indeed did Indra save Sudās in the Dāśarājña war owing to your hymn, oh Vasiṣṭhas."

Ūd dyāmivét tṛṣṇājo nāthitāsah
Ādīdhayur Dāśarājñé vṛtāsah /
Vasiṣṭhasya stuvatā Īndro aśrot
Urūm Tṛtsubhyo akr̥ṇod u lokām // -5

"(The Tṛtsus) when surrounded and distressed in the Dāśarājña war looked up (to Indra for help), as thirsty men look up to the heaven (for rain). Indra heard while Vasiṣṭha was praising him and gave wide enough space to the Tṛtsus."

Daṇḍā ivéd goājanāsa āsan
Pāricchinnā Bharatā arbhakāśah /
Ābhavae ca puraetā Vasiṣṭha
Ād it Tṛtsūnām viśo aprathanta // -6

"The Bharatas were very few and limited like the sticks used for driving the cows. But as soon as Vasiṣṭha became their leader immediately then the followers of the Tṛtsus became vast and unlimited."

Sūryasyeva vakṣātho jyōtir eṣām
Samudrāsyeva mahimā gabhirāḥ /
Vātasyeva prajāvo nānyēna
Stōmo Vasiṣṭhā ānvetaḥ vaḥ // -8

14. Prof. Velankar takes Vaiśanta and Pānta as proper names. Sāyana—"Veśantaḥ palvalam / Atrā veśantaśabdēna somādhārāś camaso laksyate / tatstham somam pāntam pibantam ugram udgūrnam Indram /" We are pleased that Prof. Velankar, however, suggests an alternative translation—"Perhaps, 'They brought the fierce Indra from afar, away from and in spite of the tubful drink'" Iḍe note on p. 20 JBBRAS (1942).

"Their light (of glory) is like the growing splendour of the sun, their greatness is vast like that of the ocean.¹⁵ Your hymn is inimitable by others like the swiftness of Wind, Oh Vasiṣṭhas."

Tā inniṇyām hṛdayasya praketañ
Sahāsravalsam abhī sām caranti /
Yamēna tatām paridhīm vāyantaḥ
Apsarāsa ūpa sedur Vasiṣṭhāḥ // -9

"They alone move about fearlessly owing to the knowledge of their heart, in the secret of a thousand branches. Intending to weave that (secret) garment, first woven by Yama, the Vasiṣṭhas approached the celestial nymph (for birth)."

Vidyūto jyōtiḥ pāri sañjīhānam
Mitrāvāruṇā yād āpaśyatām tvā /
Tāt te jānmotaśkam Vasiṣṭha
Agastyo yāt tvā viśā ājabhāra // -10

"That was your one birth, Oh Vasiṣṭha, when Mitra and Varuṇa saw you leaving your own luminous body of lightning (for being born as their son from Urvaśī). (And) when Agastya brought you to the human beings, (that was your second birth).

Utāsi Maitrāvāruṇo Vasiṣṭho-rvāśyā brahman mānasō'dhi jātāḥ /
Drapsām skannām brāhmaṇā daivyena
Viśve devāḥ pūṣkare tvādadanta // -11

"And indeed you are the son of Mitrāvāruṇā, Oh Vasiṣṭha, born from Urvaśī, owing to their ardent love for her. The Viśve Devas held their dropped semen in a lotus with the help of a celestial hymn."

Sā praketa ubhāyasya pravidvānt-
Sahāsradāna utā vā sādānaḥ /
Yamēna tatām paridhīm vāyiyān
Apsarāsaḥ pāri jajñe Vasiṣṭhaḥ // -12

"That Vasiṣṭha, well acquainted with both (gods and men), who is an appreciative giver of a thousand gifts or, even a continual giver of gifts, was born from the nymph, intending to weave the garment¹⁶ first woven by Yama."

Satré hajātāviṣitā nāmohiḥ
Kumbhé rétas siṣicatuḥ samānām /
Tāto ha Māna údiyāya mādhyāt
Tāto jātām ṣṣim āhur Vasiṣṭham // -13

15. cf. Samudra iva gāmbhīrye, dhairyena himavān iva : (Rām. I 1). The string of similes is impressive.

16. Compare the ancient Greek idea that the three Fatal Sisters weave the web of LIFE. They are : Clotho, Lachesis and Atropos. 'They lived in the deep abyss of Demogorgon 'with unwearied fingers drawing out the threads of life.' One held the spindle or distaff, the second drew out the thread and the third cut it off. Brewer : Reader's Handbook of famous names in fiction, Allusions etc. (1934).

"Being impelled by the prayers (of the Viśve Devas), they (i.e. Mitra and Varuṇa) visited their sacrifice and dropped their semen together in a jar (at the sight of Urvaśī). From the middle of it arose Māna. They call the sage Vasiṣṭha who was born from that (semen)."

Ukthabhṛtam Sāmabhṛtam bibharti
Grāvāṇam bibhṛat prā vadātyāgre /
Ūpānam ādhvam sumanasyāmānā
Ā vo gacchāti pratṛdo Vasiṣṭhaḥ // -14

"He supports the bringers of Uktha and the Sāman. Holding the press-stone, he always speaks with authority in front of all. Wait upon him with a delighted mind, here comes Vasiṣṭha to you, oh descendents of Pratṛd."

The Dāśarājña war is described again in the 83rd hymn which is a prayer to the dual divinity Indrā-Varuṇa. It is described as a past event when Indra and Varuṇa jointly gave strength to Sudās to resist the onslaught of the enemies and when they directly also rendered the enemy powerless (vv 6-8).

Dāśarājñé páriyattāya viśvātah
Sudāsa Indrā-Varuṇāvaśikṣatam /
Śvityāñeo yātra nāmasā kapardīno
Dhiyā dhīvanto āsapanta Tṛtsavaḥ // VII 83.8

"In the Battle of the Ten Kings, Sudās was overwhelmed by the enemy on all sides. The white-complexioned Tṛtsus supported him with rites and prayers. (At such a trying time), both of you taught Sudās (to resist the attack)."

But the immediate concern as indicated by vv 1-5 seems to be to face other enemies. The Dāśarājña war marks a former victory. Sudās had had to contend with enemies from within and without continuously. In fact the 5th verse appears to be a prayer just before the day of battle :

Indrā-Varuṇāv abhyā tapanti
Māghānyaryó vanúṣām ārātayaḥ /
Yuvām hí vásva ubháyasya rájathah
Ādha smā no'vatam párye diví // -5

"The fierce weapons of the enemy distress me, Oh Indra and Varuṇa, as also the more malignant among my foes. You reign supreme over both fortunes (of Earth and Heaven). Therefore, pray, do protect us on the day of battle."

The efficacy of the prayers and consequent popularity of the Vasiṣṭhas gave rise, alongside, to bitter jealousy. Hence we find throughout the maṇḍala frequent appeals to the gods for protection from the malignant attacks of the enemy. It is often the fate of the gentle and the noble folk to suffer at the hands of back-biters. The latter have no face nor ground to attack openly; but are extremely jealous of the good man's goodness. So the beast in them plays behind the back. Similar was the case with Vasiṣṭha. Apart from the foreign enemies whom his tribe had to meet almost as daily occupation in their new settlements, there must have been a good deal of stabbing from behind ; so much so that Vasiṣṭha prays Indra and Varuṇa to destroy the enemy, be he a Dāsa or an Ārya.¹⁷

In this connection we are led to believe that it is not mere prayer to the gods, or offering at a sacrifice, or even the flourish of weapons that led the chieftains to victory. All these straightforward efforts were implemented if not superseded by black magic, charms and spells. A variety of fiends, called Rākṣasas or Yātudhānas, enter the arena and play havoc. It is said they would be employed—even as they employ mercenaries nowadays—by force of magical spells by the contending parties to kill the enemy. Thus it is said, was brought about, the death of Vasiṣṭha's son Śakti,¹⁸ who, at the instigation (as is imagined) of Viśvāmitra was thrown into a forest-fire by the fiends employed by the sons of Sudās. Though a later account, we may cite the incident of King Kalmāṣapāda becoming a Rākṣasa himself to devour the hundred sons of Vasiṣṭha.¹⁹ Vasiṣṭha's person proved no exception to the attack of sorcery. Viśvāmitra commanded the river Sarasvatī to wash Vasiṣṭha down her stream to him so that he could kill him. She obeyed but made the current too quick for Viśvāmitra to grapple the victim. Vasiṣṭha was at the same time saved. But Viśvāmitra cursed the river to run blood for a year whence she became the Aruṇā ("Red River").²⁰ It must be such extensive recourse to witchcraft that prompted Vasiṣṭha to invoke the protection of the dual gods Indrā-Soma against the Yātudhānas ; the hymn is commonly designated as Rakṣoghnasūkta (VII 104).

Yó mā pákena mánasā cárantam
Abhicáṣṭe áṇṛtebhír vácobhiḥ /
Āpa iva káśínā sāngṛbhitāḥ
Āsannastváśata Indra vaktá // VII 104.8

"May he who with false allegations maligns me, who is of a pure mind, may such a speaker of falsehood, Oh Indra, cease to be, like water grasped in the fist." Or, again,

Yé pákaśamsám vihářanta évaiḥ
Yé vā bhadráṃ dūṣáyanti svadhábhīḥ /
Āhaye vā tán pradádātu Sómah
Ā vā dadhātu Nírṭter upásthe // -9

"May Soma give to the serpent or consign to the lap of Nírṭti, those who harass me with false accusations and those who vilify spitefully all that is good in me."

It is painful to hear curses as much as to pronounce them, how much more should the great Vasiṣṭha have been harassed that he is driven to burst forth with

17. Dāsā ca vṛtrā hatam āryāṇi ca (VII 83.1c)

18. Vide Sarvā. p. 130 Śakti was killed by the Viśvāmitras according to the JB (JAOS 18.47). cf. VI II 349.

19. cf. Sāyana on VII 104.12, Wilson's note on p. 207 of his Translation, Vol. 4. MBh. I 176.6 f. Rām. 3.66.8.

20. MBh IX 42.1 f. See also Hopkins, Epic Mythology, p. 183.

endless curses upon the evil-doer and the enemy. Here is a sample of his reaction to the fiendish spirits called Yātus :

Ūlūkayātum śuśulūkayātum
Jahí śváyātum utá kókayātum /
Suparṇáyātum utá gṛdhrāyātum
Dṛṣádeva prá mṛṇa rākṣa Indra // -22

“Destroy the evil spirits whether they are in the form of owls big and small, in the form of a dog or a wolf, or an eagle, or a vulture, pound the demon, O Indra, as with a boulder.”

Índra jahí púmāmsam yātudhānam
Utá strīyam māyāyā śásadānām /
Vigrīvāso mūradevā ṛdantu
Mā té dṛṣantṣūryam uccārantam // -24

“Put down, O Indra, whether it is a man or a woman, who as an evil spirit does mischief by deceit. Let these bloodthirsty demons perish with their heads cut off, so that they may not live to see the rising sun.”

Affecting his personal history, we find Vasiṣṭha caught in a couple of amusing if not compromising situations. The 55th hymn is called prasvāpinyupaniṣat, one that sends all to sleep. The contents may be summarised as follows :—

The Seer addresses the attacking dog.²¹ “On brindled dog, when you open your mouth to bark, there do flash like shining weapons, your teeth through the jaws. Desist and sleep soundly. Or pursue a thief or a robber; why do you bother us who are praisers of Indra? May you tear asunder the pig, and the pig tear you in retaliation; why do you bother us who are praisers of Indra?” Then he pronounces a spell as it were: “Let the mother sleep, let the father sleep, let the dog sleep and the lord of the house as well; let all the relations sleep and so the men round about. Whoever sits, moves about or sees us, the eyes of all those shall we close, so as to make them as motionless as this mansion. With the thousand rays does the Great Benefactor (Sun) rise from amidst yonder sea. With his gracious help shall we send all people to sleep. Those who lie in the vestibule or in the carriages or those ladies who lie on mattresses, the ladies of auspicious fragrance—all these shall we send to sound sleep.” Such an encounter with a canine sentinel and such occasion to put the whole life of a mansion into deep slumber must mean a peculiar situation for Vasiṣṭha!

21. RV VII 55.2-8. Yádarjuna Sārameya datāḥ piśānga yācchase / Viva bhrājanta ṛṣāya ūpa śrákveṣu bāpsato ni śu svapa // Stenām rāya Sārameya tāskaram vā punassara / Stotrā Indrasya rāyasi kim asmān ducchunāyase ni śu svapa // Tvām sūkarāya dardḥi tāva dardartu sūkarāḥ / Stotrā Indrasya rāyasi kim asmān ducchunāyase ni śu svapa // Sāstu mātā sāstu pitā sāstu śvā sāstu viśpātīḥ / Sasāntu sārve jātāyāḥ sāsṭvayām abhito jānāḥ // Yā āste yās ca cārati yās ca paśyāti no jānāḥ / Teṣām sām hanmo akṣāṇi yāthedām harmayām tāthā // Sahāsraśṛṅgo vṛṣabho yās samudrād udācarat / Tēnā sāhasyenā vayām nī jānāntsvā-payāmasi // Proṣṭheśayā vahyeśayā nārīr yās talpaśīvarīḥ / Strīyo yāḥ pūnyagandhās tās sārvās svāpayāmasi //

But what a revelation to know that it was all in a dream ! The Bṛhaddevatā relates the story²²—"Once during night, Vasiṣṭha in a dream entered Varuṇa's house. Then came the watch-dog to attack him. Barking and rushing upon him, he was trying to bite him. Vasiṣṭha subdued him with a couple of verses and sent him to sleep ; even so did Vasiṣṭha cause all Varuṇa's establishment to sleep too." The same is described in another setting²³ which is more funny.

"That these constitute a lullaby is related in stories. Once upon a time Vasiṣṭha was thirsty and hankering for food, having had to starve for three nights. On the fourth night, he decided to steal and came to Varuṇa's house. In order to lull the sentry and the hounds to sleep while he entered the commissariat, Vasiṣṭha saw and recited these seven ṛks commencing with 'Yād Arjuna'."

The 86th is a sort of penitential hymn praying to God Varuṇa to absolve the worshipper of all sin. The expressions are such as to make us think that the seer i.e. Vasiṣṭha himself had committed great sin and is therefore begging Varuṇa's mercy.

2. "Do I say this to my own soul ? How can I get unto Varuṇa ? Will he accept my offering without displeasure ? When shall I, with a quiet mind, see him propitiated ?

3. I ask, O Varuṇa, wishing to know this my sin. I go to ask the wise. The sages all tell me the same. Varuṇa it is who is angry with thee.

4. Was it an old sin, O Varuṇa, that thou wishest to destroy thy friend, who always praises thee ? Tell me, thou unconquerable lord, and I will quickly turn to thee with praise freed from sin.

5. Absolve us from the sins of our fathers, and from those which we committed with our own bodies. Release Vasiṣṭha, O King, like a thief who has feasted on stolen cattle, release him like a calf from the rope.

6. It was not our own doing, O Varuṇa, it was necessity an intoxicating draught, passion, dice, thoughtlessness. The old is near to mislead the young ; even sleep brings unrighteousness.

22. BD VI 11-13. Varuṇasya gṛhān rātrau Vasiṣṭhaḥ svapnam ācaran / Praviveśātha tam tatra śvā nadann abhyavartata // Krandantam sārāmayam tam dhāvāntam daṣṭum udyajam / Yadarjunēti ca dvābhyām sāntvayitvā pyasūsupat // Evam prasvāpayāmāsa janam anyam ca Vāruṇam / iti. Quoted by Sāyaṇa, introducing the hymn.

23. Saṅguruśiṣya on Sarvā. ed. Macdonell, p. 133.

Āsām prasvāpīnitvam tu kathāsu parikalpyate /
Vasiṣṭhas tṛṣṭo'nnārthī trirātrālabdhabhojanah /
Caturtha rātrau cauryārtham Vāruṇam gṛham etya tu /
Kosṭhāgārapravesāya pālakaśvādisuptaye /
Yadarjunādi saptarcam dadarśa ca jajāpa ca //

The text of the Sarvā. bears no indication (p. 26)—

8. O Lord, Varuṇa, may this song go well to thy heart! May we prosper in keeping and acquiring! Protect us, O gods, always with your blessings."²⁴

Reflecting upon these verses, it is not necessary to suppose that Vasiṣṭha himself committed all sins contemplated, for instance, in the sixth stanza above. The whole hymn is like an "aparādha-kṣamāpaṇa-stotra," praying for forgiveness of sins which are apt to be committed by man; a repetition of the hymn every day by the eager worshipper also ensures desisting from committing the sins specified. In other words, it exerts a kind of prophylactic influence on the mind of the worshipper. Vasiṣṭha perhaps designed this hymn for the benefit of his numerous followers. The last stanza signifies a typical finish for such hymns.

With a little stretch of imagination one thinks that Vasiṣṭha had a strange experience of the sea; perhaps a shipwreck. Father Varuṇa should, of course, save him.

‘Apām mādhye tasthivāmsam tṣṇāvidajjaritāram /
Mṛṣā sukṣatra mṛṣāya //²⁵

"Thirst has possessed me, thy worshipper in the midst of the waters, grant me happiness, O Lord of Wealth, grant me happiness."

Evidently the seer longs for peace and contentment, being caught in the midst of worldly greed. He is at sea, as the English idiom has it. The reference has to be viewed more philosophically than literally. But from another context, however, Vasiṣṭha's sea-voyage seems to be a certainty. (RV VII 88.3-4). The Seer sings:

"Boarding the ship, when Varuṇa and I entered the mid-ocean and floated with other vessels on water we indeed very much enjoyed the delightful rocking of the ship.

"Amivahāṣtau vāstospatyādyā gāyatrī śeṣātryupariṣṭād bṛhatyādayo'nuṣṭubhaḥ prasvāpīya upaniṣat" /

24. RV VII 86. Utā svāyā tanvā 3 sām vade tāt kadā nvāntārvāruṇe bhuvāni / kim me havyām āhṛṇāno juṣeta kadā mṛṣikām sumānā abhi khyam // 2

Preché tād éno Varuṇa didṛkṣūpo emi cikitūso vipṛecham / Samānām inme kavāyaś cidāhur ayām ha tūbhyam Varuṇo hṛṇite // 3

Kim āga āsa Varuṇa jyēṣṭham yāt stotāram jighāmsasi sakhāyam / Prā tāmne voco dūlabha svadhāvo'va tvānenā nāmasā turā iyām // 5

Āva drughāni pitryā sṛjā nō'va yā vayām cakrām tanūbhiḥ / Āva rājan paśutṛpam nā tāyām sṛjā vatsām nā dāmno Vasiṣṭham // 5

Nā sā svō dākṣo Varuṇa dhṛtīḥ sā sūrā manyūr vibhīdako ācittīḥ / āsti jyāyān kānīyasa upāre svāpnas canēd ānṛtasya prayotā // 6

Ayām sū tūbhyam Varuṇa svadhāvo hṛdi stōma ūpaśritaś cidastu / Sām naḥ kṣēme śāmu yōge no astu yūyām pāta svastībhis sādā naḥ // 8

25. RV VII 89.4. Sāyapa—apām samudrāpām udakānām madhye tasthivāmsam sthita-vantam api jaritāram tava stotāram mām tṣṇā pipāsā avidat āptavati / Lavaṇotkaṣasya sāmudrajalasya pānānarhatvāt / atas tādrśam mām mṛṣa sukhaya //

"Varuṇa took the Ṛṣi Vasiṣṭha on his ship and, with gracious feelings,²⁶ made him capable of great deeds. Further, the intelligent god, by way of happy time for the minstrel, extended many a dawn into day. (i.e. he enabled the sage to spend many happy days on board the ship)."²⁷

Lastly, Vasiṣṭha was initiated into the deepest secrets of Existence by Varuṇa, who, in this manner can be said to have exercised a truly paternal care over his own son :

Uvāca me Vāruṇo mēdhirāya
Trīḥ sapta nāmāḡhnyā bibharti /
Vidvān padāsya gūhyā nā vocat
Yugāya vipra uparāya śikṣan //²⁸

"Varuṇa told me who am intelligent the thrice seven names that the Cow (or Speech) bears. The wise and skilful Varuṇa also imparted the secrets of the Supreme world to me, his favourite pupil."

(C) VASIṢṬHA—VIŚVĀMITRA RELATIONSHIP

There has been much conjecture and concoction on this point throughout Sanskrit Literature ; and even in recent opinions expressed. But if the R̥gveda is to be regarded as the basis of our legends and legendary study, it must be acknowledged that there is nothing stated about the mutual relationship of these famous priests of the R̥gvedic Age. RV III 4 and VII 2 are both Āpri-hymns in the respective Maṇḍalas. How curious that verses 8-11, i.e. as many as four consecutive stanzas, are identically the same ! In the words of M. Bloomfield, "We should expect diversity there if anywhere."²⁹ At worst, the two sages are neither friends nor enemies. One common ground however can be marked out that both befriended the same king, Sudās, at different times. Vasiṣṭha helped Sudās to win the Battle of the Ten Kings. Viśvāmitra also helped Sudās to cross the confluence of Vipās and Śutudrī, the circumstances of this adventure being however uncertain. It is generally believed³⁰ that Viśvāmitra was ousted from Sudās' partonage by Vasiṣṭha, whereupon the former set up the confederacy of the ten chieftains against Sudās. But this opinion is questioned ;³¹ and a fresh conjecture

26. The Samhitā reads māvobhiḥ, but Sāyaṇa reads āvobhiḥ in the sense of rakṣanaib. His authority has however not been traced. Both MM and Poona (Vaidika Saṁsodhana Maṇḍala) Editions have noticed this discrepancy between the text and the commentary.

27. RV VII 88.2-4—Ā yādruhāva Vāruṇaś ca nāvam prā yāt samudrām Irāyāva mādhyam / Ādhi yād apīm snūbhīś cārāva prā preṅkhā iṅkhayāvahai śubhē kām // Vasiṣṭham ha Vāruṇo nāvyaḥādhaḥ ṛsim cakāra svāpā māvobhiḥ / Stotāram vipraḥ sudinatvė āhnām yānnu dyāvas tatānan yād Uśāsah //

28. RV VII 87.4 padāsya utkr̥ṣṭasya sthānasya Brahmālokalakṣaṇasya—Sāyaṇa.

29. Bloomfield, R̥gveda Repetitions, p. 647. Religion of the Veda p. 72. 'The two books (RV III and VII) share quite a number of other lines (14 common lines in all)'.

30. Cf. VI II. p. 275.

31. See IHQ (June 1930) K. C. Chaṭtopādhyāya on the Dāsārājāś Battle pp. 261-64.

put forward that the Bhāradvājas were the family priests of Sudās before either Viśvāmitra or Vasiṣṭha. Viśvāmitra was not responsible for the League of the ten kings. On the other hand it is possible to think that both priests were entertained by Sudās on two different occasions. Whoever the family priest he must, and would, have tolerated the advent of another for temporary service. As the Āryans were confronted with problems of land and living, it is natural that they contracted the enmity of local dwellers. So we can suppose that both priests had their own enemies to contend with. A few expressions are pointed out in RV III 53 and RV VII 18, 33 and 104 to say that they are indirect references to their mutual hatred. But why such a forced surmise? If the enmity were true why does not the Veda say it? There is no harm, for we could, in our time-honoured complacency, regard that also as a chapter in our vast heritage!

II

LATER SAMHITĀS

1. Taittirīya Samhitā

Viśvāmitra won the abode of Agni by means of the hymn "This is that Agni." —*Ayam so'gniriti Viśvāmitrasya sūktam bhavati, etena vai Viśvāmitro'gneḥ priyam dhāmāvarundha, Agnerevaitena priyam dhāmāvarundhe.*³² The context is the preparation of the ground for the Fire (Gārhapatyacayana).

Vasiṣṭha should be chosen as Brahman priest according to III 5.2. "The Ṛsis could not see Indra face to face; Vasiṣṭha saw him face to face, he said 'Holy lore shall I proclaim to you so that people will be propagated with thee as Purohita; therefore do thou not proclaim me to the other Ṛsis.' To him he proclaimed these shares in the stoma, therefore people were propagated with Vasiṣṭha as Purohita; therefore a Vasiṣṭha should be chosen as Brahman priest; verily he is propagated."³³

Vasiṣṭha and Viśvāmitra are together mentioned in connection with the Five Layers of Bricks. The sages Vasiṣṭha, Bhāradvāja, Viśvāmitra, Jamadagni and Viśvakarman are identified respectively as Prāṇa, Manas, Cakṣus, Śrotra and Vāc (of the sacrifice); they are described as having sprung from the Rathantara, Bṛhat, 32. TS V 2.3.3. Ayam so'gniḥ (RV III 22.1) Sarvā. ascribes the hymn to Gāthī son of Kuśika.

33. Ṛṣayo vā Indram pratyakṣam nāpaśyan tam Vasiṣṭhaḥ pratyakṣam apaśyat so'bravīd Brāhmaṇam te vakṣyāmi yathā tvatpurohitāḥ prajāḥ prajāniṣyante'tha metarebhya ṛṣibhyo mā pravoca iti tasmā etāntstomabhāgān abravīt tato Vasiṣṭha purohitāḥ prajāḥ prajāyanta tasmād Vasiṣṭho Brahmā kāryaḥ praiva jāyate (TS III 5.2). Sāyaṇa Tādṛśam Brāhmaṇam śrutvā athānantaram tvam mām itarebhyo mantrānadhikāribhya ṛṣibhyo mā pravocaḥ. But Keith has overlooked the prohibitive mā in his translation. The context demands the prohibitive, in order to establish the special privilege for the Vasiṣṭha. Hence the above translation is given with due correction. (Keith, Veda of the Black Yajus School, Tr. HOS. Vol. 18, p. 279).

Vairūpa, Vairāja, and, Śakvara and Raivata Sāmans.³⁴ Later after the bricks were duly laid, the text says—

Yāḥ prācis tābhīr Vasiṣṭha ārdhnot, yā dakṣiṇā tābhīr Bharadvāja yāḥ prāciṣ tābhīr Viśvāmitro yā udleis tābhīr Jamadagnir yā ūrdhvās tābhīr Viśvakarmā ya evam etāsām rddhim vedardhnotyeva ya āsām evam bandhutām veda bandhumān bhavati ya āsām evam kṣiptim vada kalpate asmai ya āsām evam āyatanam vedāyatanavān bhavati ya āsām evam pratiṣṭhām veda pratyeva tiṣṭhati //³⁵

“With those (bricks) put down on the East, Vasiṣṭha prospered, with those on the south Bharadvāja, with those on the west Viśvāmitra, with those on the north Jamadagni, with those above Viśvakarman. He who knows thus the prosperity in these (bricks) prospers; he who knows thus their relationship becomes rich in relations; he who knows thus their ordering, (things) go orderly for him; he who knows thus their abode becomes possessed of an abode; he who knows thus their support becomes possessed of support.”

This illustrates again the close association of the sages. The phala-śruti is very significant. At all events, it impresses upon the common worshipper the fact that co-operation from all quarters is necessary as exemplified by the great sages of old with regard to the conduct of the sacrifice. It is possible that these sages in particular circumstances did have honest differences, but did not refuse co-operation when required.

We find however but one reference to the rivalry between Vasiṣṭha and Viśvāmitra :

Viśvāmitra-Jamadagni Vasiṣṭhenāspardhetā³⁶ sa etajjamadagnir vihavayam apaśyat tena vai
Vasiṣṭhasyendriyam vīryam avṛta—

Viśvāmitra and Jamadagni had a quarrel with Vasiṣṭha. Jamadagni saw the Vihavya hymn³⁶ and drew away all the power and strength of the adversary.³⁷

34. These identifications are symbolical. One should approach them with faith (śraddhā). The point at issue is the importance that the Taittirīya attaches equally to Vasiṣṭha and Viśvāmitra along with other sages. They are solid bricks on which the edifice of the Vedic sacrifice is built. Whatever the personal relationships of Vasiṣṭha and Viśvāmitra were, their active association with the sacrifice is a testimony to their unqualified contribution to the general welfare of the community. To illustrate the symbolism just referred to, one extract may be given—“Ayam puro bhuvas tasya prāṇo bhauvāyano vasantah prāṇāyano gāyatri vāsanti gāyatriyai gāyatrām gāyatrād upāṁśur upāṁśos trivṛt trivṛto Rathantaram Rathantarād Vasiṣṭha ṛṣiḥ prajāpatiḥ ghitayā tvayā prāṇam gṛhṇāmi prajābhyah.” etc. Keith—“This one in front the existent, his, the existent's breath; spring born of the breath, the Gāyatri born of the spring, from the Gāyatri the Gāyatra (Sāman), from the Gāyatra the Upāṁśu (cup); from the Upāṁśu the Trivṛt (stoma), from the Trivṛt the Rathantara, from the Rathantara Vasiṣṭha the Ṛṣi. With thee taken by Prajāpati, I take breath for offspring”.

35. TS V 2.10.5-6 Keith's translation, p. 45 f.

36. RV X 128.1 Mānāgne nava vihavyo Vaiśvadevam jagatyantam. Sarvā, p. 43.

37. TS III 1.7. Keith, p. 230.

The Taittiriya records a calamity that befell the great Vasiṣṭha i.e. the tragic death of his sons.—

Vasiṣṭho hataputro'kāmayata vindeya prajāṃ abhi Saudāsān bhaveyam iti sa etam ekasmāṇna pañcāśam apaśyat tam āharat tenāyajata tato vai so'avindata prajāṃ abhi Saudāsam abhavad ya evam vidvān sa ekasmāṇnapañcāśam āsate vindante prajāṃ abhi bhrātrvyān bhavanti /³⁸

“Vasiṣṭha his sons slain, desired “May I win offspring and defeat the Saudāsas.” He saw this rite of forty-nine nights; he grasped it and sacrificed with it. Then indeed did he win offspring and defeated the Saudāsas. Those who, knowing thus, perform the rite of forty-nine nights win offspring and defeat their enemies.”

2. Kāthaka, Maitrāyaṇī and Vājasaneyi Samhitās

These Samhitās have nothing to add to the information already culled out. They repeat the symbolic identity of Vasiṣṭha, Viśvāmitra and other sages enunciated by the Taittiriya, only with a small change.³⁹ The following table will make it clear.

The Identity	TS	KS, MS, VS
Prāṇa-Rathantara—East	Vasiṣṭha	Vasiṣṭha
Manas-Bṛhat—South	Bharadvāja	Bharadvāja
Cakṣus-Vairūpa—West	Viśvāmitra	Jamadagni
Śrotra-Vairāja—North	Jamadagni	Viśvāmitra
Vāc-Śākvara-Raivata—Above	Viśvakarman	Viśvakarman

The following mantra of the Rgveda is found repeated by VS and KS.⁴⁰

Evéd Indram vṛṣaṇam vājrabāhum
Vasiṣṭhāso abhyarcantyarkaś /
Sā nas stutó virāvat pātu gómat
Yūyām pāta svastibhis sādā nah //

“Thus do the Vasiṣṭhas worship with praises Indra showerer of benefits, with arms like the thunderbolt. May he, thus praised, make us wealthy in heroes and in kine. And ye, gods, do protect us always with blessings.”

As usual, Vasiṣṭha and Viśvāmitra are both Seers of several hymns and parts of hymns of the White Yajurveda (VS),⁴¹ which do not contribute to our study.

38. TS VII 4.7. Keith p. 600. compare also VI II, p. 275, KB IV. 8, PB IV 7.3.

39. KS 16.10; MS 2.7.19; VS 13.54, 57.

40. RV VII 23.6. VS 20.54, KS 8.16. The verse is repeated also in AV XX 12.6, AB 6.23.2, GB 2.4.2, 2.6.5. Vait. 22.14.

41. See C. V. Vaidya, HSL. Vedic Period, p. 207.

except to confirm the uniform importance accorded to both sages by the various Samhitās. Their mutual rivalry, if at all, is of no interest to the general public.

3. Sāmaveda

Similar is the case with the Sāmaveda. Only Vasiṣṭha's name is celebrated.⁴² But both he and Viśvāmitra are seers of verses and hymns which are mostly borrowed from their R̥gvedic revelations.⁴³ SV, again, perceives no enmity between the sages.

4. Atharvaveda Samhitā

Viśvāmitra is referred in AV in three contexts.

Yāu Bharadvājam āvatho yāu Gaviṣṭhiram
Viśvāmitram⁴⁴ Varuṇa Mitra Kūtsam /
Yāu Kakṣīvantam āvathaḥ prótā Kāṇvam /
Tāu no muñcatam āmhasaḥ // AV. V 29.5

"It is a prayer to Mitra and Varuṇa: 'Ye who favour Bharadvāja, Gaviṣṭhira, Viśvāmitra, Kutsa, O Varuṇa and Mitra; who favour Kakṣīvat and Kāṇva do ye free us from distress."

Kāṇvaḥ Kakṣīvān Purumīḍhó Agastyah
Śyāvāśvaḥ Sóbharyarcanānāḥ /
Viśvāmitro'yám Jamádagnir Átrih
Ávantu naḥ Kaśyápo Vāmádevaḥ // XVIII 3.15.

'Let Kāṇva, Kakṣīvat, Purumīḍha, Agastya, Śyāvāśva, Sobhari, Arcanānas, this Viśvāmitra,⁴⁵ Jamadagni, Atri, Kaśyapa, Vāmadeva—let all these protect us."

Viśvāmitra Jámadagne Vásiṣṭha
Bháradvāja Gótama Vāmadeva /
Śardíṛ no Átrir agrabhínnámobhiḥ
Súsamsāsaḥ pítaro mṛdátā naḥ // XVIII 3.16.

"O Viśvāmitra, Jamadagni, Vasiṣṭha, Bharadvāja, Gotama, Vāmadeva—Atri hath taken our abode with obeisances; ye fathers of good report, be gracious to us."

42. SV Pūrva. 3.5.9. 4.4.8, 6.2.5. Uttara, 3.13.3, 4.4.8, 5.9.3.

43. C. V. Vaidya, quoted above, p. 193 et. seq.

44. Viśvāmitram viśvam kṛtsnam jagat mitram yasya saḥ tathoktaḥ / Mitre carṣau iti pūrvapadasya dīrghaḥ /...

Vasiṣṭham / Vasumatattamam / Vasumacchabdād īṣṭhani 'Vinmatorluk' / 'ṣṭh' iti ṭilopaḥ / Sarvaśreṣṭham Vasiṣṭhākhyam maharṣim rakṣathaḥ / at AV. IV 29.3—Sāyaṇa.

45. Ayam iti idam śabdena pūrovartivastuvācinā sarvajana-sannihitatvena sarvāmitratvam upapādyate—Sāyaṇa. But Whitney takes ayam with Jamadagni. AV XVIII. 3.63 records the expression "Viśvāmitrāḥ" which does not refer to the sage Viśvāmitra or his descendants. The stanza is in praise of Yama, wherein the 'All-Friends' (Brāhmanas) are called upon to offer praise and oblations to the God, so that He may grant long life. See Whitney, AV Tr. (HOS VIII), p. 866.

Viśvāmitra is the seer of a few hymns of the AV. The hymn III 17 is pronounced for successful agriculture (Kṛṣiḥ).⁴⁶ AV V 15-16 are exorcisms to plants; used for the healing of distempered cattle also; the later hymn is perhaps directed against insect pests. VI 44 is for cessation of disease, according to Kauśika Sūtra (31.6), it is used in a remedial rite against slander (apavāda). VI 141 is pronounced with marking of cattle's ears (gokarṇayor lakṣyakaraṇam) and 142 is for increase of food grain (annasamṛddhi).⁴⁷

Viśvāmitra's name is thus connected with charms and spells; but they have all been for good purposes. Whereas, by means of these, diseases were removed and food became abundant, why should the sage not be called Viśvā-mitra 'friend of the world'?

The name Vasiṣṭha occurs ten times in the AV. From a study of the contexts and according to the commentary, the word is used as an adjective five times;⁴⁸ so we shall consider the other five here,⁴⁹ referring to the sage.

1. Yāvaṅgirasam avatho yāvagastim
Mitrāvaruṇā Jamadagnim Atrim /
Yau Kaśyapam avatho yau Vasiṣṭham
Yau no muñcatam amhasaḥ // IV 29.3.

"Ye who protect Aṅgiras, Agasti, Jamadagni and Atri, O Mitra and Varuṇa, ye who protect Kaśyapa and Vasiṣṭha,—do ye free us from distress."

2. Vasiṣṭha next appears among other names, including Viśvāmitra, (AV XVIII 3.16), as stated above.

3. Ūdu brāhmānyairata śravasyā
Indram samaryé mahayā Vasiṣṭha /
Ā yó viśvāni śávasā tatāna
Upaśrotā ma ívato vácāmsi // ⁵⁰

"They have all offered their prayer to Indra for the sake of food, you also, Vasiṣṭha, do extol him at the sacrifice. And may that Indra, who extended the universe by his might, listen to my words, as I approach him."

46. Cf. RV X 101, IV 57 and parts in VS, Ts, Ta, and Ms. Much of RV material is repeated; we discover a few variant readings also. Whereas the Samhitā texts have been handed down with meticulous care and accuracy, a comparative study of the repetitions in the different Samhitās must yield interesting text-critical results.

47. Consult Whitney's Atharva-veda (Tr.)—Harvard Oriental Series, Vols. 7 and 8 (1905) Ed. C. R. Lanman.

48. AV VI. 21.2, 44.2, 119.1, VII 55.2, SVIII 3.46.

49. AV IV 29.3, XVIII 3.16, XX 12.1, 8; 117.3. It may be recalled that Whitney considers books XIX and XX as later additions. In his Harvard Translation, he translates XIX as supplement, XX he does not notice at all. Cruel Death took him away before the volumes were published. Who knows, had he lived, he would have added XX also as supplement.

50. Same as RV VII 23.1, SV I 390, AB 6.18.3, 20.7, KB 29.6, GB 2.4.2, 6.1.2, AA 5.2.2.3, Vait. 22.13. Designated as ud-u-brahmīya sūkta. ŚŚ 18.19.10, 20.6.

4. The next verse 'Evéd Īndram' (AV XX 12.6) was dealt with above in connection with YV references.

5. Bódhā sú me maghavan vacam émam
 Yām te Vāsiṣṭho ārcati prāsastim /
 Imā Brāhma sadhamāde juṣasva //⁵¹ XX 117.3.

" O Opulent one ! Give heed to this address of mine, this with which Vasiṣṭha offers you praise. These prayers, be pleased to accept at the sacrifice."

Vasiṣṭha also is the seer of a few hymns in AV. I 29 is a hymn to Brahmanaspati for a chief's success. (Rāṣṭrābhivardhanam sapatnakṣayanam ca); an amulet is also tied, it is called abhivartamani-sūkta.

III 19-22 are to help friends against enemies (19), to Agni and other gods for various blessings (20,21), to gods in general for splendour (varcas) (22).

IV 22 is for the success and prosperity of a king (amitra-kṣayanam : for the destruction of the enemy)—for victory in battle according to Kauśika-sūtra.

XX 12 and 117 are hymns borrowed from the Vāsiṣṭha-maṇḍala of RV.

It may be noticed from the above that Vasiṣṭha is by no means a tame sage. He was definitely, and perhaps more actively than Viśvāmitra connected with martial adventures. With rites and incantations for a king's success in battle, or for a man's prosperity or contentment, Vasiṣṭha must have been a heaven to many kings and men in distress. We notice also that there is not the slightest suggestion of Vasiṣṭha-Viśvāmitra rivalry. By the enumeration alongside of various Ṛṣis it is fair to think that all these sages were alike holy in the eyes of the worshipper, and a great deal of time must have separated the sages and the composer of the hymn (IV 29) with the burden 'taū no muñcatam āmhasaḥ'—an argument for the late age of at least portions of the Atharva-veda. Public opinion does not seem to have taken note of the alleged feud between Vasiṣṭha and Viśvāmitra. On the other hand, recorded evidence points to the universal recognition accorded to both the sages. Whatever enmity there might have been, it must have been of a purely personal nature—one that did not affect the well-being of the world at large.

III

BRĀHMAṆAS

This branch of Vedic literature depicts the contributions made by Vasiṣṭha Viśvāmitra to the sacrificial cult. They were chief among those who strove to make the Sacrifice a perfect system. There is not a trace of discord between them;

51. RV VII 22.3, SV 2.270, MS 4.12.4, KS 12.15.

on the other hand their collective service has oftentimes been emphasised. We shall scrutinize in detail :

1. The Āitareya Brāhmaṇa first speaks of Viśvāmitra as the seer of the Sampāta Hymns.⁵² It is said that he first saw a few hymns which Vāmadeva quickly appropriated as his own, whereupon Viśvāmitra saw fresh ones.⁵³ In the same manner did Bharadvāja, Vasiṣṭha and Nodhas also see several hymns.⁵⁴

Tān vā etān Sampātān Viśvāmitraḥ prathamam apaśyat tān Viśvāmitreṇa drṣṭān Vāmadevo'srjataivā tvām Indra vajrinnatra yanna Indro jujuṣe yacca vaṣṭi kathā mahām avṛdhat kasya hotur iti tān kṣipram samapatad yat kṣipram samapatat tat sampātānām sampātatvam /

Sa haikṣāñcakre Viśvāmitro yān vā aham Sampātān apaśyam tān Vāmadevo' srṣṭa kāni nvaham sūktāni Sampātāmstatpratimān srjeyeti sa etāni sūktāni Sampātāmstatpratimān asrjata sadyo ha jāto vṛṣabhaḥ kanīna Indraḥ pūrbhi-dātīrad dāsam arkair imāmūṣu prabhṛtim sātaye dhā icchanti tvā somyāsaḥ sakhā-yah Śāsad vahnir duhitur naptyaṅgād abhi taṣṭeva didhayā manīṣām iti /

Ya eka iddhavyaś carṣaṇinām iti Bharadvājo yas tigmaśṛṅgo vṛṣabho na bhīma udu brahmānyairata śravasyeti Vasiṣṭho'smā idu pra tavase turāyeti Nodhāḥ /⁵⁵

Later these hymns are praised as follows :

Tad etat sūktam⁵⁶ svargyam etena vai sūktena devāḥ svargam lokam ajayan etena ṛṣayaḥ tathaivaitadyajamānā etena sūktena svargam lokam jayanti / Tadu Vaiśvāmitram viśvasya ha vai mitram Viśvāmitra āsa / Viśvam hāsmāi mitram bhavati ya evām veda yeṣām caivam vidvān etanmaitrāvaruṇaḥ purastāt sūktānām aharahaḥ śamsati /⁵⁷

"That hymn is heavenly. It is by Viśvāmitra, Viśvāmitra was the friend of all ; all become friendly to him who knows thus and to those for whom a Maitrāvaruṇa, knowing thus, recites this before the hymns day by day." With this sūkta, again, the gods won the heavens, with this the ṛṣis, and so with this will the sacrificers also win the heavenly world.

Similarly the Vasiṣṭha hymn : Udu brahmānyairata :⁵⁸

Tad etat sūktam savrgyam etena vai sūktena devāḥ svargam lokam ajayan etena ṛṣayas tathaivaitad yajamānā etena ṛṣayas tathaivaitad yajamānā etean sūktena svargam lokam jayanti / Tadu Vasiṣṭham etena vai Vasiṣṭha

52. RV IV 19 ; 22 ; 23.

53. RV III 49 ; 34 ; 36 ; 30 ; 21 ; 38. The hymns are enumerated in the order stated in the Brāhmaṇa.

54. RV VI. 22, VII. 19 ; 24. I. 61.

55. AB VI 18.

56. Sadyo ha jāto vṛṣabhaḥ kanīnaḥ (RV III 49)

57. Ibid VI 20.

58. RV VII 24.

Indrasya priyam dhāmopāgacchat sa paramam lokam ajayat / Upendrasya priyam dhāma gacchati jayati paramam lokam ya evam veda /⁵⁹

“This hymn is heavenly, with this hymn indeed did the gods win the heavens; with this the Ṛṣis; and with this will the sacrificers also win the heavenly world. This is by Vasiṣṭha. With this indeed did Vasiṣṭha approach the abode dear to Indra, and he won the supreme world. He who knows thus will go to the abode dear to Upendra (Viṣṇu) and will win the supreme world.”

Vasiṣṭha and Viśvāmitra are both connected with the Śunaśśepa legend.⁶⁰ In the sacrifice which was contemplated by king Hariścandra they officiated as priests: Vasiṣṭha as Brahmā and Viśvāmitra as Hotā. Viśvāmitra's part in the story of Śunaśśepa is remarkable. He befriended poor Śunaśśepa, adopted him into his family as eldest son and passed on to him his earthly possessions as well as his divine lore. As this story has been fully treated in the foregoing chapter, it is unnecessary to dilate upon it here. Suffice it to remember that the two sages were highly regarded by society and that, between them, no rivalry appears to have existed.

Besides the above, there are a few references in the AB to Vasiṣṭha only. He is said to have introduced the Rathantara-sāman and Bharadvāja the Bṛhatsāman, in connection with a hymn of the Ṛgveda:⁶¹

Rathantaram ājabhārā Vasiṣṭhaḥ /
Bharadvājo Bṛhad ācakre agner iti Bṛhadrathantaravantam evainam tat karoti /⁶²

The term Vasiṣṭha has been pointed out as an appellation to Agni:⁶³

Adabdhavratapramatir Vasiṣṭha ityagnir vai devānām Vasiṣṭhaḥ /⁶⁴

Agni is Vasiṣṭha (atīṣayena nīvāsahetuḥ), the best shelter-giver or protector, and one whose preference is always for harmless rites.⁶⁵

In the chapter which describes the sacrifice and the part played therein by the Brāhmaṇas and the Kṣatriyas, it is said that the famous priests of the times pass on the tradition of the sacrifice and, specially of the participation of the Soma-food (bhakṣa), to their respective royal disciples. Thus, Tura son of Kavaṣa narrated it to Janamejaya son of Parikṣit, Parvata and Narada to Somaka son of Sahadeva, to Sahadeva son of Śrījaya, to Bahbru son of Devavṛdh, to Bhīma of 59. AB VI 20.

60. AB VII 16-18.

61. RV X 181.1.

62. AB I 21. cf. also Ait. Ā. III 1.6.

63. RV II 9.1e.

64. AB I 28.

65. adabdhve himsārāhite vrata karmani prakṛtā matir yasyāgneḥ so'yam adabdhavratapramatiḥ / Śāyana. AV. Ānandāśrama edn. Vol. I, p. 122.

Vidarbha and to Nagnajit of Gāndhāra; Agni narrated it to Sanaśruta, the suppresser of enemies, knower of the sacrifice, and son of Janaka, (finally) Vasiṣṭha to Sūdās son of Pijavana. And all these having partaken of the Soma-food rose to eminence, all became sovereign lords, being established in glory, all shone like the Sun, gathering tributes from all quarters.⁶⁶ This passage warrants the belief that Vasiṣṭha was the priest of king Sūdās, at least in the early part of his reign.

That Vasiṣṭha anointed Sūdās on the throne is stated in another passage. Enumerating the names of several kings of old who were coronated in the manner in which Indra himself was coronated, it is said "With this great anointing of Indra, Vasiṣṭha anointed Sūdās Pajavana. Therefore, Sūdās Pajavana went round the earth completely, conquering on every side, and offered the horse in sacrifice."⁶⁷

Durmukha the Pāñcāla and Atyarāti Jānantapi by the very knowledge of Indra's great anointing conquered the earth, their priests being Bṛhaduktha and Vasiṣṭha Sātyahavya respectively. A kind of conflict is however reported between Atyarāti and the priest Vasiṣṭha Sātyahavya. This Vasiṣṭha, son of Sātyahavya said to Atyarāti: "Thou hast conquered entirely the earth on every side: do thou make me great." Then said Atyarāti Jānantapi "When I conquer, O Brahman, the Uttara Kurus, then thou wouldst be king of the earth, and I should be thy General." Vasiṣṭha Sātyahavya replied: "That is a place of the gods, no mortal man may conquer it. Thou hast been false to me, therefore I take this from thee." Then Amratapana Śuśmīṇa Śaibya, a king, slew Atyarāti Jānantapi, whose strength had been taken away and who had lost his power. Therefore one should not play false with a Brahman who knows thus and has done thus (thinking) "Let me not lose my kingdom, nor let breath forsake me."⁶⁸

66. Etamu haiva provāca Turah Kāvaseyo Janamejayāya Pāriksitāyaitamu haiva procatuḥ Parvata-nāradau Somakāya Sāhadevyāya Sahadevāya Sārthajayāya Babhrave Daivāvṛdhāya Bhīmāya Vaidarbhāya Nagnajite Gāndhārāyaitamu haiva provācāgnih Sanaśrutāyārindamāya kratuvide Janakāya etamu haiva provāca Vasiṣṭhaḥ Sūdāse Pajavanāya te ha te sarva eva mahajjagmur etam bhakṣam bhakṣayitvā sarve haiva mahārājā āsur āditya ivā ha sma śrīyām pratiṣṭhitās tapanti sarvābhyo digbhyo balim āvahantaḥ // AB VII 34.

67. Etena ha vā Aindreṇa mahābhiṣekeṇa Vasiṣṭhaḥ Sūdāsam Pajavanam abhiṣiṣeca tasmād u Sūdāḥ Pajavanah samantam sarvataḥ pṛthivīm jayan pariyāyāśvena ca medhyeje/ AB VIII 21. Other kings anointed in the same fashion are: Tura son of Kavaṣa anointed Janamejaya son of Parikṣit; Cyavana anointed Śāryāta, Somaśuśmā anointed Śātānika, Parvata and Nārada anointed Āmbāṣṭhiya and also Yudhāmsrausṭhi; Kaśyapa anointed Viśvakarman, Samvarta son of Aṅgīras anointed Marutta son of Avikṣit, Udamaya son of Atri anointed Aṅga, and Dirghatamas son of Mamatā anointed Bharata son of Duṣṣanta. After being anointed, all these kings conquered the earth and offered the horse in sacrifice. Ibid. (AB VIII 21).

68. Sa hovāca Vasiṣṭhaḥ Sātyahavyo'jaisir vai samantam sarvataḥ pṛthivīm mahān mā gamayeti sa hovācātyarātir Jānantapir yadā brāhmaṇottarakurūn jayeyam atha tvamu haiva pṛthivyai rājā syāḥ senāpatir eva te'ham syām iti sa hovāca Vasiṣṭhaḥ Sātyahavyo devakṣetram vai tanna vai tanmartyo jetum arhatyadruṣo vai ma ā ta idam dada iti tato hātyarātīm Jānantapim āttaviryam niśukram amratapanaḥ Śuśmīṇaḥ Śaibyo rājā jaghāna / Tasmād evam viduse brāhmaṇāyairvān cakruṣe na kṣatriyo druhyenned rāṣṭrād avapadyeyam ned vā mā prāno jahaditi jahaditi // AB VIII 23. See also Keith's Rigveda Brāhmaṇas Translated (Harvard Oriental Series, No. 25, 1920), p. 338 f.

2. The *Aitareya Āraṇyaka*⁶⁹ celebrates Vasiṣṭha and Viśvāmitra as follows: While their names are, as usual, connected with several hymns and rites,⁷⁰ the Āraṇyaka offers useful exegetical comment on their names: Thus Viśvāmitra is "friend of the Universe" or "one to whom the universe is friend."⁷¹ And Vasiṣṭha is the best or most excellent of all.⁷² Viśvāmitra is further described as having Indra reveal himself to him.

"Indra sat down beside Viśvāmitra who was about to recite the hymns of this day. He saying 'This is food,' recited the thousand *bṛhatī*s. Thus he went to Indra's dear home. Indra said to him, 'Seer, thou hast come to my dear home. Do thou, seer, repeat a second hymn.' He saying 'This is food,' recited the thousand bṛhatī verses. Thus he went to Indra's dear home. Indra said to him, 'Seer, thou hast come to my dear home. Do thou, seer, repeat a third hymn'. He saying 'This is food,' recited the thousand bṛhatī verses. Thus he went to Indra's dear home. Indra said to him, 'Seer, thou hast come to my dear home. I give thee a boon.' He said, "Let me know thee.' Indra said, 'I am breath; thou, seer, art breath; all creatures are breath; he that shines is breath. In this form, I pervade all the quarters. This my food is my friend, my support. This is the food of Viśvāmitra. I am he that shines.' Thus said he."⁷³

The Āraṇyaka proceeds to describe the importance of the thousand *bṛhatī*s. "The consonants are the body, the vowels the souls, the sibilants the breath. Knowing this he became Vasiṣṭha ('most excellent'). Thence took he the name.

69. Edited with introduction, translation, notes etc. by A. B. Keith, Anecdota Oxoniensia, 1909 Oxford.

70. I.2.2. RV III 47 is composed by Viśvāmitra (Tadu Vaiśvāmitram). I 4.2. Vasiṣṭha's name is associated with the *Sūdadaha*s verse, and again with the Virāj verses (I 5.2)—Virājah śamsatyannam vai virājo'nnādyasyāvaruddhyai / Vasiṣṭhena paridadhāti Vasiṣṭho'sānti /

71. Tadu Vaiśvāmitram viśvasya ha vai mitram Viśvāmitra āsa / Viśvam hāsmāi mitram bhavati ya evam veda yeśam caivam vidvān etaddhotā śamsati / I 2.2. This hymn is composed by Viśvāmitra. Now Viśvāmitra was the friend of all, and all is the friend of him who knows this and of those for whom a Hotṛ priest, who knows this, recites this hymn (RV III 47). Again in a later chapter: Tasyedam viśvam mitram āsid yad idam kiñca tad yad asyedam viśva-mitram āsid yad idam kiñca tasmād Viśvāmitras tasmād Viśvāmitra ityācaksata etam eva santam / (II 2.1). "Because all whatsoever was his friend, therefore he is Viśvāmitra. Therefore they call him who is (prāṇa) Viśvāmitra."

72. Tam devā abruvannayam vai naḥ sarveśam Vasiṣṭha iti tasmād Vasiṣṭhas tasmād Vasiṣṭha ityācaksata etam eva santam / II 2.2. "The gods speak to him, 'Let him be the richest of us all.' Because the gods spake to him, 'Let him be the richest of us all,' therefore he is Vasiṣṭha. Therefore they call him who is (prāṇa) Vasiṣṭha."

73. Viśvāmitram hyetad ahaḥ śamsiṣyantam Indra upaniṣasāda / Sa hānnam ityabhivṛyāhṛtya bṛhatīśahasram śasamsa tenendrasya priyam dhāmoṣyāya / Tam Indra uvāca ṛṣe priyam vai me dhāmopāgāḥ sa vā ṛṣe dvitīyam śamsati / Sa hānnam ityevābhivṛyāhṛtya bṛhatīśahasram śasamsa tenendrasya priyam dhāmoṣyāya / Tam Indra uvāca ṛṣe priyam vai me dhāmopāgāḥ sa vā ṛṣe tṛtīyam śamsati / Sa hānnam ityevābhivṛyāhṛtya bṛhatīśahasram śasamsa tenendrasya priyam dhāmoṣyāya / Tam Indra uvāca ṛṣe priyam vai me dhāmopāgāḥ varam dadāmi / Sa hovāca tvām eva jāniyām iti / Tam Indra uvāca Prāṇo vā aham asmyṛṣe prāṇas tvam prāṇas sarvāni bhūtāni prāṇo hyeṣa ya eṣa tapati sa etena rūpeṇa sarvā diśo viṣṭo'smi tasya me'nnam mitram dakṣiṇam tad Vaiśvāmitram eṣa tapann evāsmi hovāca // II 2.3. (Ait. Āraṇyaka).

Indra proclaimed this to Viśvāmitra, Indra proclaimed this to Bharadvāja, so Indra is in sacrifices invoked by him as a friend."⁷⁴

3. The *Śāṅkhāyana Brāhmaṇa*⁷⁵ presents Vasīṣṭha and Viśvāmitra in much the same manner as the AB and Ait. Ā. Viśvāmitra is identified with Vāc (Speech)—Vāg vai Viśvāmitraḥ;⁷⁶ and is associated with certain puronuvākyas, praiṣas and anupraiṣas.⁷⁷ Vasīṣṭha and Viśvāmitra are together associated with certain invocations.⁷⁸ Vasīṣṭha by himself too is mentioned in connection with several group invocations.⁷⁹ But noteworthy is what is referred to as Vasīṣṭha-yajña. It is a sacrifice performed by Vasīṣṭha in order to avenge the death of his son (Śakti) or sons, caused by the Saudāsas.

Vasiṣṭho'kāmayata⁸⁰ hataputraḥ prajāyeya prajāyā paśubhir abhi Saudāsān bhaveyam iti sa etam yajñakratum apaśyad Vasiṣṭhayajñam tam āharat tenāyajata teneṣṭvā prajāyata prajāyā paśubhir abhi Saudāsān abhavat tathā evaitad yajamāno yad Vasiṣṭhayajñena yajate prajāyate prajāyā paśubhir abhi dvīṣato bhrātṛvyān bhavati //

'When his sons were killed, Vasīṣṭha desired: 'I should propagate and should, with progeny and cattle, defeat the Saudāsas'. Then he saw this sacrifice, conceived the Vasiṣṭhayajña, with that he sacrificed and, having sacrificed propagated, and then with progeny and cattle defeated the Saudāsas. Thus if a sacrificer sacrifices according to Vasiṣṭhayajña, he will propagate and with progeny and cattle will conquer the enemies'.

4. The *Śāṅkhāyana Aranyaka*⁸¹ refers, principally,⁸² to the incident of Viśvāmitra receiving revelation from Indra: a fact borne out by other texts as well.⁸³

"Viśvāmitra indeed went to the dear home of Indra by reason of recitation and the performance of vows. To him, said Indra, 'Viśvāmitra, choose a boon'.

74. Tad vā idam brhatisahasram sampannam tasya yāni vyañjanāni taccharīram yo ghoṣaḥ sa ātmā ya ūsmāṇaḥ sa prāṇaḥ / Etaddha sma vai tad vidvān vasiṣṭho Vasiṣṭho babhūva tata etan nāmadheyam lebhe / Etad u haivendro Viśvāmitrāya provācātau haivendro Bharadvājāya provāca tasmāt sa tena bandhunā yajñeṣu hūyate // II 2.4.

75. Ed. Ānandāśrama Series, No. 65.

76. Śāṅkh. B. X 5, XV.1, XXIX. 3.

77. Ibid., also XXVIII 1,2.

78. Śāṅkh. B XXVI. 14, XXVIII. 10 etc.

79. Compare e.g. Vasiṣṭham ājyam Vasiṣṭham preṭham (XXII.7), Vasiṣṭhaḥ praugaḥ (XXV.2, XXVI.15), Vasiṣṭham āprīṣuktam (XXV.10) etc.

80. Ibid. IV.8.

81. Text. Ānandāśrama Series No. 90. Translation by A. B. Keith. Oriental Translation Fund Series, No.18, RAS, 1908.

82. Viśvāmitra and Vasīṣṭha are as usual associated with certain hymns and formulas. vide II 7.16. The name Vasīṣṭha occurs again in IX 2 but appears to have been used in its adjectival sense. Yo ha vai vasiṣṭhām veda vasiṣṭho ha svānām bhavati vāg vai vasiṣṭhā /—"He who knows the most excellent becomes the most excellent among his own (people). Speech indeed is the most excellent."

83. Compare, for instance, Ait. Ā. II 2.4 supra.

Viśvāmītra said 'Let me know thee'. '(choose) again'. 'Thee only'. '(choose) a third time'. 'Thee only'. To him said Indra 'I am the great (m) and the great (f), the god and the goddess, the Brahman and the Brāhmaṇi'. Viśvāmītra was still feign to know more. To him said Indra, 'I am that which I have said, but what is more, he that performs no penance may be even such as I am'. Then indeed did Indra proclaim the vyāhrtis. They sufficed for him."⁸⁴

The last section of the book gives a long line of Teachers from whom tradition was handed down. The list is interesting not only for many renowned names of ancient tradition but also for the light it throws upon the chronological relationship of those eminent personalities. It is significant that Vasiṣṭha does not find a place in this series. Perhaps he represents another school. Viśvāmītra receives the knowledge directly from Indra and is removed from Brahman only by three generations.

Says the author of the Āraṇyaka—we have learnt it from Guṇākhyā Śāṅkhāyana, Guṇākhyā Śāṅkhāyana from Kahola Kauṣītaki, Kahola Kauṣītaki from Uddālaka Āruṇi, Uddālaka Āruṇi from Priyavrata Saumāpi, Priyavrata Saumāpi from Somapa, Somapa from Soma Prātiveśya, Soma Prātiveśya from Prativeśya, Prativeśya from Bhaddiva, Bhaddiva from Sumnayu, Sumnayu from Uddālaka, Uddālaka from Viśvamanas, Viśvamanas from Vyaśva, Vyaśva from Sākamaśva Devarāta, Devarāta from Viśvāmītra, Viśvāmītra from Indra, Indra from Prajāpati, Prajāpati from Brahman, Brahman (n) is self-existent. Honour to Brahman, honour to Brahman.⁸⁵

5. In the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa, as elsewhere, the sages Viśvāmītra and Vasiṣṭha are symbolised as Ear (śrotra)⁸⁶ and Breath (prāṇa)⁸⁷ respectively. The context is the construction of the first layer in the building of the sacred

84. Śāṅkh. Ā. I.6. "Viśvāmītro ha vā Indrasya priyam dhāmopajagāma śastrena ca vratacaryayā tam hendra uvāca Viśvāmītra varam vṛṇīsveti sa hovāca Viśvāmītras tvām eva vijānyām iti dvīṣyam iti tvām eveti tṛ yam iti tvām eveti tam hendra uvāca mahānśca mahatī cāsmi devaśca devī cāsmi brāhma ca brāhmaṇi cāsmi tātā u ha Viśvāmītro vijijñāśām eva cakre tam hendra uvācātad vā aham aśmi yad etad avocam yad vā kṛṣeto bhūyo'tapas tad eva tat syādaham iti tad vā Indro vyāhrtīr ūce tā upāptā āsannityathopanidhāya preṅkhaphalakam trirabhyam nyatrirabhyavan iti //

85. Ibid XV. Namō Brahmane nama Ācāryebhyo Guṇākhyāc Chāṅkhāyanād asmābhīr adhūtam Guṇākhyāc Śāṅkhāyanah Kaholāt Kauṣītakeḥ Kaholaḥ Kauṣītakir Uddālakād Āruṇer Uddālaka Āruṇiḥ Priyavratāt Somāpeḥ Priyavratas Somāpis Somapāt Somapas Somāt Prātiveśyāt somah Prātiveśyah Prātiveśyāt Prativeśyo Bhaddivād Bhaddivas Sumnayos Sumnayur Uddālakād Uddālako Viśvamanaso Viśvamanā Vyaśvād Vyaśvas Sākamaśvāt Sākamaśvo Devarātād Devarāto Viśvāmītrād Viśvāmītra Indrād Indrah Prajāpateḥ Prajāpatir Brahmano Brahmā Svayambhūr namō Brahmane namō Brahmane //

86. ŚB 8.1.2.6—Śrotram vai Viśvāmītra pśir yad anena sarvataś kṛṇotyatho yad asmai sarvato mitram bhavati tasmācchrotram Viśvāmītra pśih. (Śatapatha-Brāhmaṇa ed. Albrecht Weber. Berlin 1855 with extracts from the commentaries of Sāyaṇa, Harisvāmin and Dviveda Ganga etc. Text editions have been recently brought out in Benares (Kasi Sanskrit Series 127, 1937 etc.) and in Bombay (Lakshmi-Venkatesvar Steam Press, 1940). See Dandekar's Vedic Bibliography. ŚB was translated by Julius Eggeling in SBE volumes 12, 26, 41, 43 and 44, the last portion known as the Bhāḍārāyana (XIV 4-9) being left out.)

87. ŚB 8.1.1.6—Prāṇo vai Vasiṣṭha pśir yad vai nu śreṣṭha tena Vasiṣṭho'tho yad vastṛtamo vasati teno eva Vasiṣṭhaḥ.

fire-altar. Secondly, they are among the Seven Sages (saptarṣis) representing the seven vitals viz. two eyes, two nostrils, two ears and the mouth, which together constitute the prāṇas.⁸⁸

Sage Vasiṣṭha is specially glorified inasmuch as he knew the Virāj, even 'Indra coveted it' and desired to know the same from the sage. Vasiṣṭha communicated the same to him and in return obtained the knowledge of the expiation for the whole Soma sacrifice. For some time, indeed, "the Vasiṣṭhas alone knew these utterances, whence only one of the Vasiṣṭha family became the Brahman priest. But since nowadays anybody may study them, anybody may now become Brahman."⁸⁹

Otherwise, the term Vasiṣṭha is several times used in an attributive sense. There is, for example, reference to Vasiṣṭha-yajña (excellent sacrifice) which Prajāpati performs in order to propagate mankind.⁹⁰ Agni is the guardian of undisturbed rites and the most wealthy (vasiṣṭhaḥ).⁹¹ Speech is, indeed, an excellent thing (vāg vai vasiṣṭhā).⁹²

Thus, the mention of the office of the Brahman priest being thrown open to all who know the job proves the posteriority of the Śatapatha to the Taittiriya. And be it noted that even at such a late period, the special importance of the Vasiṣṭhas was recognised and no ill-will expressed. Vasiṣṭha and Viśvāmitra are alike members of the priestly hierarchy.

6. The *Pañcaviṃśa Brāhmaṇa*⁹³ of the Sāmaveda, also known as Tāṇḍya-mahābrāhmaṇa, records something of value which throws light on the personal history of the two sages, Vasiṣṭha and Viśvāmitra. Besides, they, being among

88. ŚB XIV 5.2.6—Prāṇā vā ṛṣayaḥ...Imāveva Viśvāmitra-Jamadagni...imāveva Vasiṣṭha Kaśyapau. Dviveda Ganga explains the sevenfold prāṇa as: cakṣurdvayam nāsikādvayam śrotādvayam mukham iti sapta (prāṇāḥ) p. 1126 Weber's edn.

89. ŚB XII 6.1.38-41—Tā Brahmaiva juhuyāt nābrahmā...Vasiṣṭho ha virājam vidām cakāra tām hendro'bhidadhyau // Sa hovāca / Rṣe Virājam ha vai vettha tām me brūhīti sa hovāca kim mama tataḥ syād iti sarvasya ca te yajñasya prāyaścittim brūyām rūpam ca tvā darśayeyeti sa hovāca yannu me sarvasya yajñasya prāyaścittim brūyāḥ kimu sa syād yam tvam rūpam darśayethā iti jīvasvarga evāsmālokat preyād iti // Tato haitām ṛṣir Indrāya Virājam uvāca / Iyam vai virād iti tasmād yo'syai bhūyishtham labhate sa eva śreṣṭho bhavati // Atha haitām Indra ṛṣaye / Prāyaścittim uvācāgnihotrād agra ā nahata ukthāt tā ha smaitāḥ purā vyāhrtir Vasiṣṭhā eva vidus tasmāddha sma purā Vasiṣṭha eva Brahmā bhavati yatas tvenā/ apyetarhi ya eva kaś cūdhite tato ' pyetarhi ya eva kaśca Brahmā bhavati sa ha vai Brahmā bhaviti arhati sa vā Brahmā ityāmantritaḥ pratiṣṭuyād ya evametā vyāhrtir veda //

90. ŚB II 4.4.2—Prajāpatiḥ vā etenāgre yajñeneje / Prajākāmo bahuh prajāyā paśubhiḥ syām Śriyam gaccheyam yaśaḥ syām annādāḥ syām iti // Sa vai dakṣo nāma / Tad yad enena so'gre'yajata tasmād dākṣayajñayajño nāma, utainam eke Vasiṣṭhayaajña ityacakṣate. Contrast Śākḥ. B. IV 8, where Vasiṣṭhayaajña is that performed by sage Vasiṣṭha to avenge the death of his son or sons. See Supra section (3), p.

91. ŚB VI 4.2.7—adabdhavratapramatir Vasiṣṭhaḥ (Agniḥ).

92. ŚB XIV 9.2.2—Vāg vai Vasiṣṭhā same Khanda 7—Ko no vasiṣṭha iti (' which of us is best '4),—14—Vāg uvāca yad vāham vasiṣṭhāsmi,—3.4—Vasiṣṭhāyai svāhā.

93. Text with Śāyana's commentary: Kashi Sanskrit Series, No. 105 in two parts, Benares 1935. Ed. A Chinmaswami Sastri. English Translation by Dr. W. Caland in Bibliotheca Indica, No. 255, Asiatic Society of Bengal, 1931.

the foremost in the priestly ranks, are credited with the seership of several sāmans in connection with various sacrificial rites.

Thus the 'Krośa'-sāman is attributed to Viśvāmitra "By this (sāman), forsooth, Indra (once upon a time) at Indra-krośa yelled : 'Viśvāmitra and Jamadagni, here are cows'. The Krośa is applied for gaining cattle."⁹⁴

"Krośam bhavati / Etena vā Indra Indrakrośe Viśvāmitra-Jamadagnī imā gāva ityākrośat paśūnām avarudhyai Krośam kriyate."

Similarly, the Rohita-kūliya-sāma which is to win victory in battle. A legend is related in this connection.⁹⁵ Viśvāmitra once upon a time went with the cart-train of the Bharatas. He made a wager with certain fellows, the Adanti by name, 'Ye shall win for me this wealth, ye shall fill these carts for me, if these two ruddy ones shall drive up the bank this cart laden with stones.' He thereupon saw these two sāmans; by means of these, having yoked them, he drove them forward and won the wager.

"Rohita-kūliyam bhavatyājijityāyai / Etena vai Viśvāmitro rohitābhyām rohitakūla ājim ajayat / Viśvāmitro Bharatānām manas satyā ayāt so'danti-bhīr nāma janatāyām śam prāsyate mām mām yūyam astikām jayāthemāni mahyam pūrayātha yadimāvidam rohitāvaśmācitam kūlam udvahata iti sa etc sāmāni apaśyat tābhyām yuktṛvā prasedhat so udajayat //" (PB XIV 3.11-13).

94. PB XIII 5.14-15. Caland adduces a legend in this connection culled from the Jaiminīya Brāhmaṇa (in Auswahl edited by himself, III 237). 'The Bharatas once upon a time were on one bank of the Sindhu hard pressed by the Ikṣvākus. With them (i.e. the Bharatas) stayed Viśvāmitra and Jamadagni. Now Indra asked of Bhayada, son of King Asamāti, the two bay steeds which the gods had given him as gift. He did not give them to him. These not having been given, he (Indra) called at Indrakrośa and said "Viśvāmitra and Jamadagni, acquire ye these cows of the Ikṣvākus." These two being on the opposite bank heard this. They said to the Bharatas, 'Indra calls unto us, acquire ye these cows of the Ikṣvākus, come along let us acquire them.' They answered 'Then make you two this Sindhu fordable for us.' 'Then yoke ye your horses.' They yoked and descended into the river. Then these two said, 'Throw away all your palpūlanis.' They threw them away. Now a rājanyabandhu, who possessed a palpūlanī bound it beneath the axle of his chariot. Viśvāmitra and Jamadagni wished, "May this (Sindhu) be fordable for us." Viśvāmitra saw this sāman and landed with it. They came into the river addressing these verses (RV I 11.4-6) and respectfully approached the water. The stream became fordable and they crossed. ...These two having passed behind the cows of the Ikṣvākus hemmed them in front and acquired the cattle. The legend bears a striking similarity to the famous crossing of the Rivers by Sudās, with the help of Viśvāmitra who made the rivers fordable at the confluence of Viprāś and Śutudrī (cf. RV III 33).—Vide Caland's translation, p. 324 f.

95. PB XIV 3.11-13. Caland again cites the corresponding version from JB (in Auswahl, III 185) which runs 'Viśvāmitra, in the company of the waggon-train of the Bharatas, encountered the Mahāvṛṣas. Now there was either on the Gaṅgā or the Yamunā, a high, steep bank at the opposite side. Said the Mahāvṛṣas, "which forsooth, are now those two draught-oxen that will be able to drive up such a high, steep bank?" Viśvāmitra answered, "These two ruddy ones of mine." Said the Mahāvṛṣas, "Let us make a wager, if the draught-oxen will drive up this bank, thou shalt fill the cart with wares, but if they do not drive up we shall win thy wares." He agreed to this. The oxen were yoked to a cart laden with barley or rice. Viśvāmitra wished, "May I win the race," and saw these two sāmans and drove them on. The oxen reached the opposite bank, so Viśvāmitra won the race... And because he had won at the bank (kūla) by means of his two ruddy ones (rohitā), therefore these two sāmans are called Rohita-kūliyas.'—Vide Caland, p. 354 f.

The first reference to Viśvāmitra's association with a kingdom as its lord is met with in this Brāhmaṇa. He is said to have performed a four-day rite called 'Sañjaya,' to obtain victory. "The Jahnus and the Vṛcivats quarrelled for the possession of the kingdom. Viśvāmitra, the king of the Jahnus saw this rite and practised it. He got the kingdom, the others were deprived of it. One who has a rival should perform it. He who knows this succeeds himself and his rival is defeated."

".....Viśvāmitrasya sañjayaḥ / Jahnu-Vṛcivanto rāṣṭra āhimsanta sa Viśvāmitro Jāhnavo Rājaitam apaśyat sa rāṣṭram abhavad arāṣṭram itare / Bhrātrvyavān yajeta / Bhavatyātmanā parā'sya bhrātrvyo bhavati ya evam veda" // (PB XXI 12.1-4).

The sage Vasiṣṭha, likewise, saw a number of sāmans. The famous Rathantara is assigned to him. Having concentrated all its greatness, Vasiṣṭha chanted it and went to the world of heaven.

"Tasya Vasiṣṭho mahimno vinidhāya tena stutvā svargam lokam ait tām sambhṛtyodgāyet" ⁹⁶

A certain Vasiṣṭha, son of Viḍu praised with a sāman seen by the sage Vasiṣṭha, and succeeded in getting a glimpse of heaven.

"Vāsiṣṭham bhavati / Vasiṣṭho vā etena Vaidavah stutvāñjasā savrgam lokam apaśyat ..." ⁹⁷

Another sāman dear to Vasiṣṭha or one that endeared the sage is mentioned. That sāman, in fact, enabled Vasiṣṭha to win Indra's favour. And he, who in praising applies the Vasiṣṭha-sāman, wins the favour of the deities.

"Vasiṣṭhasya priyam bhavati / Etena vai Vasiṣṭha Indrasya premāṇam agacchat premāṇam devatānām gacchati Vāsiṣṭhena tuṣṭuvānaḥ..." ⁹⁸

Nihava-sāman is another contribution of the sage Vasiṣṭha, who on that account became a special favourite of Indra. It is like this: Once upon a time "the seers did not see Indra face to face. Vasiṣṭha desired: 'How may I see Indra face to face?' He saw this Nihava-sāman and, thereupon, he saw Indra face to face. Indra said to him: 'I will tell thee a brāhmaṇa so that the Bharatas, having thee as their chaplain, may be multiplied, but do not disclose me to the other seers'. He told him those stomabhāgas (sāman-groups), and,

96. PB VII 7-18. Sāyana: tasya rathantarasya mahimno mātmyāci viprakīrṇāni vinidhāya viśeṣaikaṭra sthāpya. Contrast Caland's tr. "having distributed its greatness." The mātmyas are indicated in the next sentence of the text—Yaste goṣu mahimā yaste apsu rathe vā te stanayitnau ya u te yaste agnau mahimā tena sambhava Rathantara draviṇavanna edhi // Ibid, VII 19.

97. PB XI 8.13-14.

98. PB XII 12.9-10 cf. also XV 3.38.

thereupon, the Bharatas, having Vasiṣṭha as their chaplain, were multiplied. This sāman is associated with Indra."

Rṣyao vā Indram pratyakṣam nāpaśyan sa Vasiṣṭho'kāmayata katham Indram pratyakṣam paśyeyam iti sa etan nihavam apaśyat tato vai sa Indram pratyakṣam apaśyat; sa enam abravīd brāhmaṇam te vakṣyāmi yathā tvatpurohitā Bharatāḥ prajaniṣyante'tha mā'nyebho ṛṣibhyo mā pravoca iti tasmā etān stomabhāgān abravīt tato vai Vasiṣṭhapurohitā Bharatāḥ prajāyanta sendram vā etat sāma yad etat sāma bhavati sendratvāya //⁹⁹

But, apart from these distinguishing contributions to the efficacy of the sacrificial rites, on the part of Vasiṣṭha, he is oftentimes represented as having been afflicted by the death of his son Śakti or of a hundred sons as later legend puts it. In his sad bereavement he saw sāmans and performed rites not only to console himself but also to avenge the son's death which was alleged to have been caused by the sons or descendants of Sudās (Saudāsas), under the instigation of Viśvāmitra. Thus Vasiṣṭha saw the pragātha: "Indra krātum na ā bhara " (RV VII 32.26) and then became rich in progeny and cattle. This pragātha is for the sake of obtaining progeny.

' Indra kratum na ābhareti pragātho bhavati /
Vasiṣṭho vā etam putrahato'paśyat sa prajāyā paśubhiḥ prajāyata yad eṣa pragātho bhavati prajātyai " //¹⁰⁰

For the same reason viz. the death of the son and towards the same end viz. progeny and cattle, does Vasiṣṭha in another context see what is known as Janitra-sāman, constituting two chants: The janitra is said to come under a more comprehensive category called the Brahmana-sāman.

" Vasiṣṭhasya Janitram prajākāmāya Brahmasāma kuryāt / Vasiṣṭho vā etat putrahatas sāmāpaśyat sa prajāyā paśubhiḥ prajāyata yad etat sāma bhavati prajātyai " //¹⁰¹

Finally Vasiṣṭha saw a four-day rite called catūrātra and practised it whereby he relieved himself of the sense of defeat and humiliation caused by his son's death.

99. PB XV 5.24. cf. also PB V 4.5. The same legend in TS III 5.2. and KS XXXVII 17. Bharatas are an ancient clan. According to the Nighaṇṭu, the term is counted among ṛtvik names (Nigh. III 15.1). Supra note 3.

100. PE IV 7.3. On the pragātha mentioned, compare Sarvā. (p. 25) which says: Saudā-saṁ agnau prajāpityamāpaḥ Śaktir antyam pragātham ālebhe (ārebhe) so'rūharea ukte'dahyata / tam putroktam Vasiṣṭhah samāpayateti Śātyāyanakam Vasiṣṭhasya eva hutaputrasyārṣam iti tāndakam // The Tāndaka (i.e. PB IV 7.3) in question, evidently, goes a step forward and says that the bereaved sage saw this pragātha to make up for the loss, as at were, by obtaining progeny. The legend is alluded to in other texts as well: cf. KS XII 10. TS II 5.2.1, VII 4.7.1 etc.

101. PB VIII 2.3-4. Vide Caland's observation on the Brahmasāman. cf. the corresponding legend narrated in JB. described by H. Oertel in JAOS XVIII p. 47 f. (1897).

This coupled with Vasiṣṭha's two Janitra-sāmāns will elevate the man in distress from position to position and bring him progeny as well :

“ Vasiṣṭhaḥ putrahato hīna ivāmanyata sa etam apaśyat so'gram paryaid yo hīna iva manyeta sa etena yajeta / Yat stomāt stomam abisaṅkrāmatyagrādevāgram rohati Vasiṣṭhasya Janitre bhavataḥ prajātyai // ”¹⁰²

Thus, the Pañcaviṃśa Brāhmaṇa records the high celebrity attained by Vasiṣṭha and Viśvāmitra. A certain amount of personal history of these sages is provided inasmuch as in the one case the son's death had had a profound effect upon the father, and in the other, Viśvāmitra's kingship of the Jahnuś has been expressed and a not inconsistent martial and sportive spirit clearly illustrated by the Indrakrośa and Rohitakūla incidents. One may still wonder, with the background of the Samhitā-evidence, whether the kingship of the Jahnuś still proves the rājanyatva of Viśvāmitra : i.e. whether Viśvāmitra belonged to the Kṣatriya-varṇa. It looks as if that the four varṇas had not yet become water-tight compartments. There is again, no reference to the sages' mutual hostility. Viśvāmitra and Jamadagni are friends, a fact borne out by RV also.¹⁰³

7. In the Jaiminiya or Talavakāra Upaniṣad Brāhmaṇa,¹⁰⁴ Vasiṣṭha and Viśvāmitra figure with equal importance. The Uktha is said to belong to Viśvāmitra. “ Verily, food is all (viśva) and breath is friend (mitra). Now Viśvāmitra through exertion, through penance, through the performance of vows went unto the dear abode of Indra. And he proclaimed to him that which has come to man here. Now he went for instruction (saying) ‘ Light is this uktha’. ‘ Light (jyotis) has two syllables, breath (prāṇa) has two, food (anna) has two. That same is firmly established in food. Then Jamadagni went for instruction to him (saying) ‘ Life (āyus) is this uktha. Life (āyus) has two syllables, breath two, food two. That same is firmly established in food. Then Vasiṣṭha went for instruction to him (saying) ‘ The cow (gauḥ) is this uktha. That same is just food. For the cow is food.’ ”

‘ Tad etad Vaiśvāmitram uktham / Tad annam vai viśvam prāṇo mitram / Taddha Viśvāmitraḥ śrameṇa tapasā vratacaryeṇendrasya priyam dhāmopajagāma / Tasmā u haitat provāca yad idam maṇuṣyān āgatam /

102. PB XXI 11.2-3. along with Ibid. VIII 2.3-4 and XIX 3.8 Vasiṣṭhasya Janitre bhavato Vasiṣṭho vā ete putrahataḥ sāmāni apaśyat sa prajāyā paśubhiḥ prajāyata yad ete sāmāni bhavataḥ prajātyai //

103. cf. RV III 53.16, X 107.4.

104. Text (in Roman), translation (English) and notes : by Hanns Oertel. American Oriental Society (Journal Vol. XVI Part I, 1894). Text in Devanāgarī ed. Pandit Rama Deva (Lahore : Dayānanda Sanskrit Series 8) with an essay in Hindi on the history of Sāmaveda Literature by Pandit Bhagavad Datta, 1921. The credit of first bringing into light the JB goes to Dr. H. Oertel who subsequently wrote on the ‘ Contributions from the JB to the History of the Brāhmaṇa Literature ’ (Vide JAOS XVIII etc.).

Taddha sa upaniṣasāda jyotir etad uktham iti / Jyotir iti dve akṣare prāṇa
 iti dve annam iti dve / Tad etad anna eva pratiṣṭhitam / Atha hainam Jamadagnir upaniṣasāda āyur etad uktham iti / Āyur iti dve akṣare prāṇa
 iti dve annam iti dve / Tad etad anna eva pratiṣṭhitam / Atha hainam Vasiṣṭha upaniṣasāda gaur etad uktham iti / Tad etad annam eva / Annam hi gauḥ / ¹⁰⁵

Viśvāmitra went to the abode of Indra through exertion, penance and vows (śrameṇa tapasā vratacaryeṇa) may not be without significance in view of the elaboration of this process in the Rāmāyaṇa, of course with much colour and conceit added.

Again, "Indra said the uktha to Viśvāmitra (saying that it is Speech: Vāc). Therefore the descendants of Viśvāmitra worship Speech only. Manu ordained brahman-hood to Vasiṣṭha. Therefore they say, Brahman belongs to Vasiṣṭha. This also they say, one knowing thus is a brahman-priest; and who is equal to a Vasiṣṭha knowing thus?"

"Vāg iti hendro Viśvāmitrāyoktham uvāca / Tad etad Viśvāmitrā upāsate vācam eva / Manur ha Vasiṣṭhāya brahmatvam uvāca / Tasmād āhur vasiṣṭham eva brahmeti / Tad u vā āhur evamvid eva brahmā / Ka u evamvidam Vasiṣṭham arhatīti / ¹⁰⁶

Vasiṣṭha is said to promote progeny by means of an after-verse (anumantra) of the stomabhāga, and by reciting it he did obtain abundant progeny and cattle.

"Athaiṣa Vasiṣṭhasyaikastomabhāgānumantraḥ tena haitena Vasiṣṭhaḥ prajātikamo'numantrayām cakre ...tato vai sa bahuḥ prajāyā paśubhiḥ prajāyata" // ¹⁰⁷

8. The *Saṁvimsa Brāhmaṇa*¹⁰⁸ describes how Indra imparted the Uktha to Viśvāmitra and Brahma to Vasiṣṭha; Speech (Vāk) is Uktha and Mind (manas) is Brahma. Mind and Speech are invaluable assets to Sacrifice and its technique. Even so, Vasiṣṭha and Viśvāmitra are central figures in propounding and perfecting the sacrificial cult. Mind and Speech are further graphically represented as the two ruts of the wheels of the chariot namely the Sacrifice.

"Indro ha vai Viśvāmitrāyoktham uvāca Vasiṣṭhāya brahma, vāg uktham ityeva Viśvāmitrāya mano brahma Vasiṣṭhāya / Tad vā etad Vasiṣṭham brahma / Api haivamvidam vā Vasiṣṭham vā brahmāṇam kurvita / Tad yathobhayavartaninā rathena yām yām diśam prārthayate tām tām abhiprāpnotyevam etenobhayavartaninā yajñena yam kāmāyate tam abhyaśnute" // ¹⁰⁹

105. JUBr. III 3.6-13.

106. JUBr III 1-3.

107. Ibid., III 13.6.

108. Ed. W. H. Julius with commentary entitled Vijñāpanabhāṣya.

109. Saṁ B. I 5.

Just as a person seated on a chariot can go in a required direction, so also a person performing a sacrifice will obtain the desired object.¹¹⁰

9. The *Gopatha Brāhmaṇa*¹¹¹ of the Atharvaveda speaks of the penance performed by various sages. Vasiṣṭha is said to have done it in two places in the midst of the River Vipāś, the places being known as Vasiṣṭha-śilā and Kṛṣṇa-śilā. Viśvāmitra and Jamadagni did penance in a place called Jāmadagna; Agastya in Agastya-tīrtha¹¹² etc. Indra's special favour to Vasiṣṭha inasmuch as he revealed to him the stomabhāgas has been described in term similar to those in the Pañcaviṃśa Brāhmaṇa.¹¹³ Vasiṣṭha's name is further associated with the hīnkāra which is sacred to the sacrifice.¹¹⁴ Sacrifice itself is guarded by the different sages: Vāmadeva guarded it in the South, Vasiṣṭha in the middle, Bharadvāja in the North and Viśvāmitra on all sides. Hence Maitrāvaruṇa will not swerve from Vāmadeva, Bhāhmaṇācchamsin will not swerve from Vasiṣṭha, Aechāvāka will not from Bharadvāja; and all will stand by Viśvāmitra. Thus do the seers zealously guard the sacrifice.¹¹⁵ Finally, Vasiṣṭha and Viśvāmitra are mentioned as the seers of Sampāta hymns, while a kind of plagiarism is ascribed to Vāmadeva who appropriated the sampātas first seen by Viśvāmitra for himself, whereupon the latter saw fresh ones.¹¹⁶

It will be seen from the above that the Gopatha Brāhmaṇa does not perpetrate the so-called tradition of an hostility between Vasiṣṭha and Viśvāmitra. On the contrary both of them are represented as quite friendly in the domain of sacrifice. People have faith in both and look upon them with respect. And what is more, both are god's favourites.

110. The same idea is well described in JUBr. III 16 :

ayam vāva yajño yoyam pavate / Tasya vāk ca manasā ca hyeṣa etan manasā ca vartate /
Tasya hotādhvaryur udgātetyanyatarām vācā vartanim samaskurvanti / Tasmāt te vācā kurvanti / Brahmaiva manasā anyatarām / Tasmāt sa tūṣṭim āste //

The sacrifice rests on Speech and Mind. These are the two ruts on which the sacrifice proceeds. The three priests, hotṛ, adhvaryu and udgātṛ, look after one of them by means of speech (because they recite aloud the praises and the chants), whereas the Brahman priest contemplates upon the other in mind only; hence he remains silent. He is responsible for the flawless performance of the rites; therefore he silently but vigilantly supervises the work of all the others.

111. Das Gopatha Brāhmaṇa, Herausgegeben von Dr. Dieuke Gaastera (Leiden, 1919). GB text was printed in Calcutta by Jivānanda Vidyāsāgar in 1891.

112. BG I 2.8. Atha khalu Vipānmadhye Vasiṣṭha-śilā nāma prathama āśramo dvitīyah Kṛṣṇaśilās tasmin Vasiṣṭhas samāpatat, Viśvāmitra-Jamadagni Jāmadagne tapatah / ...Agastyo'-gastyatīrtithe tapati / etc.

113. Ibid II 2.13. cf. PB XV 5.24 which particularises Vasiṣṭha's patronage to the Bharatas, whereas here it is mankind (prajā) in general. cf note 3 Supra.

114. Ibid II 3.9. Prajāpatir vai yat prajā asṛjata tā vai tāntā asṛjata / Tā hīnkāreṇaivā-bhyaajighrat /Atha khalvāhur maharṣir vā etad yajñasyāgre geyam apaśyat / Tad etad yajñasyāgre geyam yaddhīnkāras tam devās ca ṛyaś cābruvan Vasiṣṭho'yam astu yo no yajñasyāgre geyam adrāg iti / Tad etad yajñasyāgre geyam yaddhīnkāras tato vai sa devānām sreṣṭho'-bhavat; yena vai śreṣṭhas tena Vasiṣṭhaḥ /

115. Ibid. II 3.23. Devān ha yajñam tanvānān asurarakṣāmsyajighāmsan / Te'bruvan Vāmadevam tvam na imam yajñam dakṣīnato gopāyeti / Madhyato Vasiṣṭham / Uttarato Bharadvājam / Sarvān anu Viśvāmitram / Tasmān Maitrāvaruṇo Vāmadevānna pracyavate Vasiṣṭhād Brāhmaṇācchamsi Bharadvājād Aechāvākas sarve Viśvāmitrāt / Eta evāsmā tad ṛya'o'har ahar namagā apramattā yajñam rakṣanti ya evam veda ya evam veda /

116. Ibid II 6.1. which is almost a repetition of AB VI 18-20.

IV

VEDIC ANCILLARIES

1. Nirukta

While explaining the name Sarasvatī as Speech and a River, Yāska relates briefly the story of Viśvāmitra and the Rivers.

Tatrethāsam ācakṣate Viśvāmitra ṛṣiḥ Sudāsah Paijavanasya purohito babhūva / Viśvāmitraḥ sarvāmitraḥ ... Sa vittam grhītvā Vipāṭchutudryoḥ sambhedam āyayāv anuyayur itare / Sa Viśvāmitro nadis tuṣṭāva gādhā bhavateti ¹¹⁷

¹ In that connection they relate a story. The sage Viśvāmitra was priest of king Sudās son of Pijavana. Viśvāmitra was a friend to all. Taking his wealth he came to the confluence of Vipāś and Śutudrī; others followed; Viśvāmitra praised the rivers (and prayed) 'Do ye become fordable'.

The circumstances of this miracle are, however, nowhere clearly expressed. Some amplifications may be gleaned from other works. The Bṛhaddevatā tell us that Viśvāmitra was accompanying Sudās, having been his priest at a sacrifice:

Purohitas sannijyārtham Sudāsā saha yan ṛṣiḥ /
Vipāṭchutudryos sambhedam śam ityete uvāca ha ¹¹⁸

The Sarvānukramanī introduces the hymn (RV III 33) merely as a conversation between the rivers and Viśvāmitra, who was desirous of crossing—Samvādo nadībhir Viśvāmitrasyottitirṣoḥ.¹¹⁹ Still the questions remain: whose wealth did Viśvāmitra take? and who are those others that followed him? The old texts have no answer to give. Durga however imagines that the wealth was earned by him in his capacity as priest (paurohityopārjitaṁ); and that those who followed him were either his attendants or robbers (anuyayur itare tadanuyāyinas taskarā vā). Sāyaṇa, from the above sources reconstructs the story—

" Purā kila Viśvāmitraḥ Paijavanasya Sudāso rājñah purohito babhūva / Sa ca paurohityena labdhadhanah sarvam dhanam ādāya Vipāṭchutudryoḥ sambhedam āyayāvanuyayur itare / Athottitirṣur Viśvāmitro' gādhajale te nadyau dr̥ṣṭvottaraṇārtham ādyābhis tīr̥bhis tuṣṭāva " ¹²⁰

" In times of yore Viśvāmitra became the priest of king Sudās son of Pijavana. He, having obtained wealth from his priesthood gathered up all earnings and came to the confluence of Vipāś and Śutudrī; others followed him. Then desirous of crossing the stream whose waters were deep he praised the rivers to become 117. Nir. II 24 (p. 231 BSS edn.).

118. BD IV 106.

119. Sarvā, ed. Maedonell, p. 15-16. It is strange that Sadguruśiṣya does not narrate the story. He merely repeats the original—Uttitirṣor Viśvāmitrasya nadībhis saha samvādo'smin sūkte pratipādyate (Ib. p. 106).

120. Sāyaṇa's preface to RV III 33.

fordable". This warrants a supposition that the people who followed were not friendly; they were perhaps intent on pursuing Viśvāmītra and Sudās who must also have been in the company, as vouchsafed by BD. It is agreed on all accounts, at any rate, that Viśvāmītra was the wonder-worker before whom the rivers gave way.

Yāska does not refer to any hatred between Vasiṣṭha and Viśvāmītra. His commentator, however, refuses to comment upon the Rgvedic verse in which the word "lodham" occurs. "Lodham" is listed up in the Nighaṇṭu as one of the sixty-two words¹²¹ which are known as anavagatas (not-understood). Explaining this word Yāska quotes the Rgvedic line—"lodhām nayanti páśu manyamānāḥ"—and says :

lodham "lubdham ṛṣim nayanti paśum manyamānāḥ". Durga upon this quotes the verse (RV III 53.23) in full and then refuses to comment upon it ; because "the verse in which the word occurs is a Vasiṣṭha-hating one ; I am a Kāpiṣṭhala-Vāsiṣṭha ; hence, I do not explain it."¹²² This of course, should be regarded as based on a tradition which Yāska did not share.

Yāska refers to the birth of Vasiṣṭha¹²³ and in that connection comments on the Rgvedic verse "Utāsi Maitrā-Varuṇó Vasiṣṭha"¹²⁴ Vasiṣṭha is said to be the son of Mitra and Varuṇa who once fell in love with Urvaśi at her very sight (in a sacrifice). Their semen dropped down and was held in a pitcher of water by the Visvedevas. Then Vasiṣṭha was born. The commentator Durga draws attention to the fact that Vasiṣṭha had more than one birth ;¹²⁵ this is also supported by Rgvedic authority.¹²⁶

Vasiṣṭha's loyalty to Indra along with others viz. Parāśara and Śatayātu is stated.¹²⁷ An interesting parable¹²⁸ is told of how Vasiṣṭha once praised Parjanya for rains. The frogs seconded him, whereby he was pleased and heartily complimented them in the following Rk—

Samvatsarām śaśayānā Brāhmaṇā vratacārīṇaḥ /
Vācam Parjanyaḥ jinvitām prā maṇḍūkā avādiṣuḥ //¹²⁹

"The frogs pour forth aloud their praise which is pleasing to Parjanya, like Brāhmanas after lying the whole year in observance of a vow."

121. Nigh. IV 1.16.

122. Nir. IV. 14 (BSS edn. pp. 380-381) Durga : "Lodham ityetaḍ anavagatam / lubdham ityavagamah / yasmin nigame eṣa śabdah, sā Vasiṣṭha-dveṣiṇī r̥k /

123. Nir. V 14.

124. RV VII 33.11.

125. Nir. V. 14 Com. p. 525 f. BSS No. 73.

126. cf. RV VII 33.10-14.

127. Nir. VI 30. cf. RV VII 18.21.

128. Nir. IX 6. Vasiṣṭho varṣakāmah Parjanyaṁ tuṣṭāva / Tam maṇḍūkā anvamodanta / Sa maṇḍūkān anumodamānān dṛṣṭvā tuṣṭāva /

129. RV VII 103.1 cf. Niti. 103, p. 239.

It is said further that Vasiṣṭha, unable to bear the sorrow of his sons' death, threw himself into the river having tied the body with thread. He wanted to die; but the river untied the bonds and he was destined to live. The river was thenceforward named as Vipāś :

(Vipāṭ vipāśanād vā) / Pāśā asyām vyapāśyanta
Vasiṣṭhasya mumūrṣataḥ / Tasmād Vipāḍ ucyate /¹³⁰

The real name of the river is Ārjikiyā (having its source in the Rjika mountain; or flowing straight); it was formerly known as Uruñjirā (urujalā = full of water).¹³¹

Finally, Yāska is impressed with the great qualities for which the Vasiṣṭhas were known :¹³² " Their glory is like the splendour of the Sun; their greatness is vast like that of the ocean; their swiftness is like that of the Wind and their praises always inimitable."

2. Bṛhaddevatā

Mitrikṛtya janā viśve yad imam paryupāsate
Mitra ityāha tenainam Viśvāmītra stuvan svayam //¹³³

" Because all men making friends with him resort to worship therefore Viśvāmītra (friend to all) himself praising him calls him Mitra (friend)."

One easily sees here a clue to Viśvāmītra's own name if not his character. The author of BD appears to commend the sage as a universal friend. Indeed, while praising the Sun-god¹³⁴ as a friend who urges all men to action as a friend who supports both earth and heaven as a friend who is vigilant in regard to the welfare of those who toil (kṛṣṭib), Viśvāmītra undoubtedly may have had the God's example for his own emulation or guidance! And we know from the legends that he always proved to be a friend of the distressed.

Of the seven names of the Sun, he the God is reputed to have acquired the name Bhaga because the sage Vasiṣṭha praised him so :

Udito bhāsayamllokān imāś caīṣa svaraśmibhiḥ /
Svayam Vasiṣṭhas tenainam ṛṣir āha stuvan bhagam //¹³⁵

130. Nir. IX 26. Durga expands : Vasiṣṭhaḥ kila mamañjāsyām mumūrṣaḥ putramaraṇa-śokārtāḥ pāśair ātmānam baddhvā / Tasya kila te pāśā asyām vyapāśyanta vyamucyanta udakena / Tataḥ prabhṛti Vipāṭ abhavat /

131. The Nirukta context is Yāska's comment on RV X 75.5 (Imām me Gange Yamune etc.) vide Durga's com. on the word-exegesis. BSS Vol. 85 pp. 928-931.

132. Nir. XI 20. Athāpi ṛṣayaḥ stūyante / "Sūryasyeva vakṣatho jyotiḥ eṣām etc." RV VII 33.8.

133. BD II 49.

134. cf. RV III 59.1. "Mitró jānān yātayati bruvānó / Mitró dādhāra pṛthivīm utā dyām / Mitrah kṛṣṭir ānimīśābhī caṣṭe / Mitraya havyām ghrītvaj juhota //". Vide Yāska's explanation : Nir X 23. According to Sarvā, the deity of the hymn is Mitra who is generally identified with Sun (see Sāyana's com.). In the Bṛhaddevatā however it appears to be one of the 26 names of Indra, as pointed out by Macdonell (p. 39 of his Tr.; specially note on v. 32). These 26 names happen to coincide almost with those enumerated in Nigh. V 4 and 5. Therefore Mitra, in its derivative sense, may apply to both Indra and the Sun.

135. BD II 62. cf. RV VII 41.2-5.

"And he arose illuminating these worlds with his rays: therefore, the seer Vasiṣṭha himself, praising him, calls him Bhaga."

The text of BD refers to Viśvāmitra and Vasiṣṭha in a few contexts which are of no significance indeed for the study of their mutual relationship. Thus the character of the Vaiśvadeva hymns differs from seer to seer.¹³⁶ There is narāśamsa in Vasiṣṭha's Āpri hymns, while there is praise of Tanūnapāt in Viśvāmitra's.¹³⁷ The hymns of several seers are characterised by refrains; but those of Kutsa differ in this regard from those of Bharadvāja, Gṛtsamada, Vasiṣṭha and others.¹³⁸

That Viśvāmitra was first king and then elevated himself to the position of a Brahmarṣi is first clearly expressed by BD

Praśāsyā gām yas tapasābhyagacchat
Brahmarṣitām ekaśatam ca putrān /
Sa Gāthiputras tu jagāda sūktam
Somasya metyāgneyam yat pare ca //¹³⁹

"The son of Gāthi who, after ruling the earth, attained by penance to the position of a Brahman-seer (Brahmarṣi) and obtained a hundred and one sons, uttered the hymn which is addressed to Agni 'Somasya mā' and the two following." It is well-known that Viśvāmitra saw the whole of the third maṇḍala.

Viśvāmitra's conversation with the River Vipāś and Śutudrī and the successful crossing of their confluence in the company of Sudās have already been considered.¹⁴⁰ We may now pass on to other events of the sage's life.

According to BD, Viśvāmitra was once involved in an incident with the sage Śakti son of Vasiṣṭha, at a great sacrifice performed by Sudās. Viśvāmitra was forcibly deprived of consciousness; he sank down unconscious. But to him the Jamadagnis gave speech called Sasarpārī, daughter of Brahmā or of the Sun, having brought her from the dwelling of the Sun. Then that Speech dispelled Kuśika's loss of intelligence.

Sudāśaś ca mahāyājñe Śaktinā Gāthiśūnave /
Nigṛhitam balācetaḥ so'vasidad vicetanaḥ /
Tasmai brāhmīm tu Saurīm vā namnā vācam sasarpārīm /
Sūryakṣayād ihāhṛtya dadus te Jamadagnayaḥ /
Kuśkānām tatas sā vāg amatim tām apāhanat //¹⁴¹

Sage Viśvāmitra goes down to history, as well as his redoubtable adversary Vasiṣṭha, on account of what BD styles as Vasiṣṭha-dveṣiṇyaḥ which are four 136. Ibid. II 130-131.

137. Ibid. II 156 where Vasiṣṭha is referred to as Urvaśi's son (Aurvaśa); also II 157.

138. Ibid. III 128. Vide Macdonell's note on the stanza.

139. BD IV 95.

140. Ibid. IV 105-106. See supra, p. 212 of this.

141. BD IV 112-114. cf. RV III 53.15-16.

stanzas seen by Viśvāmitra and which are in the nature of imprecations against the enemy, who is presumed to be Vasiṣṭha. These mantras, though incorporated in the R̥gveda-samhitā, the Vasiṣṭhas do not hear. Great sin attaches to recite or hear them. Those who recite or listen to them will have their heads split into a hundred bits; their children will die; hence the said stanzas should not be uttered. The teachers approve of this course.

Parāś catasro yās tvatra Vasiṣṭhadveṣīnyas smṛtāḥ /
 Viśvāmitrena tāḥ proktā abhiśāpā iti smṛtāḥ /
 Dviṣaddveṣās tu tāḥ proktāḥ vidyāś caivābhicārikāḥ /
 Vasiṣṭhās tānna śṛṇvanti tad ācāryakasammatam /
 Kirtanācchravaṇād vāpi mahādoṣaś ca jāyate /
 Śatadhā bhidyate mūrdhā kīrtanena śruteṇa vā /
 Teṣāṃ bālāḥ pramiyante tasmāt tās tu na kīrtayet /¹⁴²

The Brhaddevatā commemorates Vasiṣṭha's greatness quite systematically commencing from his very birth. We shall recount the whole pedigree because of its interest. "The son of Prajāpati was Marici, Marici's son was the sage Kaśyapa. He had thirteen divine wives, the daughters of Dakṣa: Aditi, Diti, Danu, Kālā, Danāyu, Simhikā, Muni, Krodhā, Viśvā, Vasiṣṭhā. Surabhi, Vinatā and Kadrū by name; these daughters Dakṣa gave to Kaśyapa. From them, the Gods and Asuras, the Gandharvas, the Serpents, the Rākṣasas, Birds, Piśācas, and other classes of beings were produced. Now among these daughters, the one goddess Aditi produced twelve sons. They were—Bhaga, Aryaman, Amśa, Mitra and Varuṇa, Dhātṛ and Vidhātṛ, Vivasvat, Tvaṣṭṛ, Pūṣan, and also Indra; the twelfth is called Viṣṇu. Thus that pair was born of her namely Mitra and Varuṇa. When they saw the nymph Urvaśi at a sacrificial session, the semen of these two Ādityas was effused. It fell into a jar containing water. Now at that same moment, two vigorous ascetics, the seers Agastya and Vasiṣṭha, came into being. The semen however, having fallen in various ways—in a jar, in water, on the ground—the sage Vasiṣṭha, the best of seers was produced on the ground; while Agastya was produced in the jar, and Matsya, of great brilliance, in the water. Then Agastya, of great glory, arose being the length of a peg only (śamyā). Because he was meted with a measure, he is here called Mānya; or else (because) the seer was born from a jar. For measurement is made with a jar also; by jar (kumbha) the designation of a measure of capacity is indicated. Then, as the waters were being taken up, Vasiṣṭha was found standing on a puṣkara (lotus?). There on every side the Viśvedevas supported the puṣkara. Arising out of that water, Vasiṣṭha then performed great austerity.

"His name arose with reference to his qualities, (guṇatāḥ), from the root vas expressive of pre-eminence: for he once upon a time, by means of austerity, saw Indra who was invisible to other seers. Indra then proclaimed that he should receive shares in the Soma. This is supported by the Brāhmaṇa passage " Ṛṣayo vā Indram..." Vasiṣṭha and the Vasiṣṭhas thus became Brāhman in the Office of Brahman priest, most worthy of fees in all rites and sacrifices. Therefore one should honour with fees all such descendants of Vasiṣṭha who may at any time even today be present at a sacrificial assembly, so says a sacred text of the Bhālavins.¹⁴³

It becomes clear from the foregoing that the sage Vasiṣṭha was of divine origin, that he was favoured by Indra and that he and his tribe obtained universal recognition as Brahman priests.

Vasiṣṭha's dream is the next important event that BD would relate about him. This topic has been dealt with already in the above pages.¹⁴⁴ That a sage of Vasiṣṭha's eminence could break into another's house or that he had had to starve for three nights and steal into another's house on the fourth for food are surely things that can happen only in a dream! It has been clearly said to be a dream in BD—'Vasiṣṭhas svapna ācarat'—though Ṣaḍguruśiṣya misses the point and adds colour somewhat thoughtlessly. What, however, is important about the hymn is its magical aspect. It is called 'prasvāpinyupaniṣat', a spell which throws the concerned folk into slumber. Its efficacy as such was tested in the seer's own case!

143. BD, V 143-159.

Prājāpatyo Marīciḥ hi Māricah Kaśyapo munih /
Tasya devyo'bhavan jāyā Dākṣāyanyas trayodaśa /
Aditir Ditir Danuḥ Kālā Danāyuḥ Sindhikā Munih /
Krodhā Viśvā Vasiṣṭhā ca Surābhir Vinatā tathā /
Kadrūś caiveti duhitṛh Kaśyapāya dadau sa ca /
Tāsu devāsuraś caiva Gandharvoragarākṣasāh /
Vayāmsi ca Piśācāś ca jajñire'nyāś ca jātayaḥ /
Tatraikā tvaditir Devī dvādaśājanayat sūtān /
Bhaṣāś caivāryamāmsāś ca Mītro Varuṇa eva ca /
Dhātā caiva Vidhātā ca Vivasvāmsā mahādhyutiḥ /
Tvastā Pūṣā tatluivendro dvādaśo Viṣṇur ucyate /
Dvandvam tasyāś tu tajjajñe Mitraś ca Varuṇaś ca ha /
Tayorādityayoś satre dr̥ṣṭvāpsarasam Urvaśim /
Retaś caśkanda tat kumbhe nyapatad vāsativare /
Tenaiva tu muhūrtena vīryavantau tapasvinau /
Agastyāś ca Vasiṣṭhāś ca tatrarsā sambabhūvatuḥ /
Bahudhā patite śukre kalaśe'tha jale sthale /
Sthale Vasiṣṭhas tu munis sambhūta ṛṣisattamaḥ /
Kumbhe tvagastyas sambhūto jale Matsyo mahādhyutiḥ /
Udiyāya tato'gastyāś śamyāmātro mahāyāśāh /
Mānena sammīto yasmāt tasmān Mānya ihocyate /
Yad vā kumbhād ṛṣir jātaḥ kumbhenāpi hi mīyate /
Kumbha ityabhidhānam tu parimāṇasya lakṣyate /
Tato'psu gṛhyamāṇāsu Vasiṣṭhaḥ puṣkare sthitah /
Sarvatra puṣkaram tatra Viśvedevā adhārayan /
Uttāya salilāt tasmād atha tepe mahat tapaḥ /
Nāmāśya guṇato jajñe vasateḥ śraīṣṭhyakarmaṇah /
Adṛśyam ṛṣibhir hīndram so'paśyat tapasā purā /
Somabhāgān atho tasmāi provāca harivāhanaḥ /
Ṛṣayo vā Indram iti Brāhmaṇāt taddhi dr̥ṣyate /
Vasiṣṭhāś ca Vasiṣṭhāś ca Brāhmaṇā Brahmakarmaṇi /
Sarvakarmasu yajñeṣu dakṣiṇiyatamāś tathā /
Tasmād ye'dyāpi Vasiṣṭhāś sadasyāś syus tu karhicit /
Arhayed dakṣiṇābhis tān Bhāllaveyī śrutiś tvīyam //

144. See supra footnotes 21-23.

A pathetic interest attaches to Vasiṣṭha's bereavement in the death of his sons. Moreover he seems to have been much sinned against; fiends of all sorts oppressed him. BD says—

Rṣir dadarśa rākṣoghnā putrasōkapariplutaḥ /
Hate putrasāte tasmin Saudāsair duḥkḥitas tadā /
Rṣis tvāśiṣam āśāste mā no rakṣa iti tvṛci /

Divi caiva prthivyām ca tathā pālanam ātmanaḥ /
Ulūkayātum jahyetān nānārūpān niśācarān /
Pañcadaśyām tu sūktasya aṣṭamyām caiva Vāruṇiḥ /
Duḥkḥasōkaparitātmā śapate vilapanniva /
Hate putrasāte tasmin Vasiṣṭho duḥkḥitas tadā /
Rakṣobhūtena śāpāt tu Sudāseneti vai śrutiḥ //¹⁴⁵

"The seer, when his hundred sons had been slain by the followers of Sudās, full of pain and overwhelmed with grief for his sons, saw this hymn for the destruction of demons. In the stanza 'mā no rakṣaḥ,' the seer invokes a blessing; and protection in heaven and earth on his own behalf. With "Ulūkayātum" etc., he prays "Slay these night walkers of various forms." In the fifteenth and in the eighth stanzas of the hymn, the son of Varuṇa (Vasiṣṭha), his soul being overwhelmed with pain and grief, utters a curse. Vasiṣṭha was at that time pained, as his hundred sons had been slain by Sudāsa who, in consequence of a curse, had been transformed into a demon (rakṣas); such is the sacred tradition." A little discrepancy confronts us here. Vasiṣṭha's hundred sons were killed, no doubt. But by whom? By the Saudāsas i.e. the followers of Sudās according to stanza 28 in the above quotation; or by Sudāsa transformed as a demon, according to stanza 34. We shall see that this incident gets further complicated in later literature, the epics and the Purāṇas.

3. Sarvānukramaṇi

The pedigree of Viśvāmitra given by the Sarvā, is noteworthy :

Kuśikas tvaīśīrathir Indratulyam putram icchan brahmacaryam cacāra tasyendra eva Gāthī putro jajñe Gāthīno Viśvāmitraḥ ; sa ṭṭīyam maṇḍalam apaśyat //¹⁴⁶

Kuśika son of Iśīratha, desirous of obtaining a son equal to Indra, did penance. Indra himself chose to be his son as Gāthī. Gāthī's son was Viśvāmitra who saw the third Maṇḍala of the Ṛgveda.

145. BD VI 28, 31-34.

146. Sarvā. p. 14. Saḍguruśiṣya expands the same in verse—
Iśīrathasutas tvāśīt Kuśiko nāma nāmataḥ /
Indratulyas suto me syād iticchannakarot tapaḥ /
Brahmacaryam tu carātas tasmād Indro'bhyajāyata /
Matsamo'nyo na caiva syād aham evāśya putratām /
Gacchāmi samyagevāṁ syād iti matvā śatakratuḥ /
Sa Gāthī nāma Kuśikād Iśīrathasutād abhūt /
Indrarūpād Gāthīnas tu Viśvāmitro'pi jajñivān /
Ṭṭīyam maṇḍalam idam tapasā so'tha dṛṣṭavān //

RV III 33 is just pointed out as having been seen by Viśvāmitra as he was desirous of crossing the river ;¹⁴⁷ the circumstances are not mentioned. So also the two stanzas relating to Sasarpārī are indicated without any reference to the connected event.¹⁴⁸ But the commentator supplies the want.

Sasarpārīdvṛce prāhur itihāsam purāvidah /
 Saudāsanṛpayajñe vai Vasiṣṭhātmaja-Śaktinā /
 Viśvāmitrasyābhībhūtam balam vāk ca samantataḥ /
 Vasiṣṭhenābhībhūtas sa hyavāsīdacea Gāthijah /
 Tasmāi Brāhmiṇ tu Saurim vā nāmnā vācam Sasarpārim /
 Sūryaveśmana āhṛtya dadur vai Jamadagnayah /
 Kuśikānām tatas sā vāg amatim tām apānudat /
 Upa preteti Kuśikān Viśvāmitro'nvayojayat /
 Labdhvā vācam ca hr̥ṣṭātmā Jamadagnin apūjayat /
 Sasarpārī itī dvābhyām ṛgbhyām vācam stuvan svayam //¹⁴⁹

The details are very similar to those given in BD, if not borrowed therefrom.

Viśvāmitra's adoption of Śunaśśepa as the eldest of his sons under a new name Devarāta is of course a great event. While the Bṛhaddevatā is silent about it, Sarvā. refers to it briefly while introducing the Śunaśśepa hymns (RV I 24-30) :

Kasya pañconāṅgīrtiś Śunaśśepas sa kṛtrimo Vaiśvāmitro Devarātaḥ /¹⁵⁰
 The legend however is elaborately narrated by Ṣaḍguruśiṣya;¹⁵¹ but it is unnecessary to review the same here as it has been done already in the preceding chapter on Śunaśśepa.

The birth of Agastya and Vasiṣṭha is mentioned while introducing the Agastya hymns commencing with RV I.166 :

Mitrā Varuṇayor dikṣitayor Urvaśim apsarasam dṛṣṭvā vāsativare kumbhe reto'patat tato'gastya-Vasiṣṭhāvajāyetām /¹⁵²

But the incident of Vasiṣṭha's son Śakti being consigned to the fire by the followers of Sudās receives a fuller treatment in the Sarvā. and its commentary. The Sarvā. says :

Saudāsair agnau prakṣipyamāṇaś Śaktir antyam pragātham ālebhe so'rdharea ukte'dahyata / Tam putroktam Vasiṣṭhas samāpayateti Śāṭyāyanakam Vasiṣṭhasaiya hataputrasyārṣam iti Tāṇḍakam /¹⁵³

Ṣaḍguruśiṣya weaves a graphic narrative out of this skeleton ; his source is not traceable. It may not be wrong, however, to suppose that he has mainly drawn 147. Samvādo nadibhir Viśvāmitrasyottitirṣoḥ (Sarvā. p. 16 1 line) the commentator is equally laconic.

148. ...Pañcenaśyādi dve vāce Sasarparyai (Sarvā. p. 16 1.11).

149. Sarvā. com. p. 107.

150. Ibid., p. 6.

151. Ibid., p. 48.

152. Ibid., p. 12 and p. 98.

153. Ibid., p. 25.

from imagination rather than from any authentic source : The passage speaks for itself—

Vasiṣṭhasya sutaḥ Śaktiḥ puṣpādyartham yayau vanam /
 Rājñas Sudāso dāsās tu Vasiṣṭham dadṛśuś ca tam /
 Viśvāmitraprayuktais tu rakṣobhir veṣṭitāś ca te /
 Vanāgnau prākṣipamś cainam devabhakto'yam ityuta /
 Āstiko'yam Vasiṣṭhasya putra ityeva ca krudhā /
 Prakṣipyamāṇas so'paśyad Indra kratum iti dvṛcam /
 Ardharcam uktavān ādyam tato'dahyata so'guinā /
 Cīrāyamāṇe putre tu putrasnehapariplutaḥ /
 Mārgavikṣiptanayano Vasiṣṭho'bhyāgamad vanam /
 Dagdham sutam atha śrutvā bhūtebhyaś śokakarsitaḥ /
 Jñātvā tu drṣṭaśiṣṭam tu śikṣā nādi samāpayat /
 Yadyardharacatrayam śiṣṭam adrakṣyan mama vai sutaḥ /
 Ajīviṣyad ayam samyak sukhī ca śaradām śatam /
 Ityuktṛvā dhṛtim ālambya prayayāvāśramam punaḥ /
 Evam tu Śāṭyāyanakam vadanti brāhmaṇam kila /
 Ādyārdharcam eva Śaktir drṣṭavān dagdha eva saḥ /
 Dvṛcam sarvam Vasiṣṭhas tu drṣṭavān iti Tāṇḍakam /
 Iti brāhmaṇavaimatyam vikalpāya pradārṣitam /
 Ataś ca // Indrakratum dvṛce Śaktir ādye'rdharce vikalpitaḥ /
 Rṣir Vasiṣṭhas sūktasya devatā tvindra eva hi //154

In the above portraiture, one misses the divine grandeur or at least superhuman ability that usually attaches to a character like Vasiṣṭha. The young son being killed by the enemies lying in wait, when he was unguarded and specially when he was engaged in gathering flowers for worship, provides a background which is distinctly epic in style and conception. Vasiṣṭha's paternal care and anxiety are qualities too tame to be in conformity with the vigorous potentiality of a priest who was the guiding star of an advancing civilisation. It is said that the assassins were surrounded or supported by friends directed by Viśvāmitra. This entirely lacks authority or corroboration. Writing so late as the 12th century A.D. Saṅguruśiṣya had deeply imbibed the popular tradition (reflected in the epics and the Purāṇas) that Vasiṣṭha and Viśvāmitra were inveterate enemies of each other and that they never lost any opportunity to wreak vengeance against each other. Hence whatever Vasiṣṭha's misfortune, Viśvāmitra was the cause and vice versa.

The fact that, as time rolls on, tradition also varies is borne out by the divergence between the Śāṭyāyanaka and the Tāṇḍakā.¹⁵⁵ Of the two ṛks in question, the story alleges that Śakti had seen or composed the first hemestich only when 154. Sarvā, pp. 130-31. vide note 18 supra.

155. In fact 'Indra kratum na ā bhara' (RV VII 32.26-) is uttered by Vasiṣṭha for the sake of progeny (prajātyai). It is part of janitra-sāma. Observe that according to Nītimañjarī of Dyā Dviveda, Śakti did not die; he praised Indra and was saved. See infra.

he was consumed by the fire. The father came and saw the situation. In spite of grief, he exerted himself to complete the dvṛca. If only we go into the content of the two verses, we will be disappointed to find not a trace of sorrow reflected in it. Granting that Śakti had begun to compose an excellent hymn to Indra—a very worthy start indeed—

Īndra krátum na á bhara
Pitá putrēbhya yáthā /¹⁵⁶

“Bring us wisdom, O Indra, as a father (imparts the same) to the sons.”—

It is indeed strange that the bereaved father's completion of the dvṛca does not reflect any grief and, therefore does not appear to have been composed with a heavy heart at all. This is how Vasiṣṭha saw—

Śíkṣā no asmín Puruhūta yāmani
Jivá jyótir aśinahi //
Má no ájñātā vṛjánā durādhío
Māśivāso áva kramuḥ /
Tváyā vayám pravátaś śáśvatir
Apó'ti śūra tarāmasi //¹⁵⁷

“Teach us at this sacrifice, O Puruhūta, so that we, living beings, shall enjoy light. Let no unknown, wicked, malignant, malevolent enemy overpower us. Protected by you, may we cross over many waters.” We have thus to conclude that the two mantras in question betray no clue to Vasiṣṭha's misfortune. We have only to respect the tradition.

The Sarvā. and the commentary do not throw fresh light on the Vasiṣṭha-dveṣinyah; the latter reflects the information given by BD and reproduces one of the verses¹⁵⁸ (Śatadhā bhidyate mūrdhā etc.). The prasvāpinyupaniṣat has already been dealt with.¹⁵⁹

The last hymn of the seventh maṇḍala is called Rākṣoghna i.e. “the demon-killer,” which is described as Śāpābhiśāpaprāyam¹⁶⁰ full of oaths and imprecations.” The text and the commentary are brief in their notice of this; there is no reference to the loss of Vasiṣṭha's hundred sons, which the BD and the several Brāhmaṇa texts point out quite frequently.¹⁶¹

4. Nītimañjarī

The strange moralisations of the Nītimañjarī have already been familiar to us. We may note a few more examples.

156. RV VII 32.26ab

157. RV VII 32.26cd and 27.

158. BD IV 120.

159. Supra fn. 21-23.

160. Sarvā, p. 27.

161. BD VI 28; 31-34. RV VII 104. See supra and the sections on JUBr. PB etc.

A prolific parent comes to grief, indeed, like Viśvāmitra.

Rājaputro jaganmitro rājamānyo bahuprajah
Sīdatyeva, Sudāso hi Viśvāmitro'harad dhanam //¹⁶²

The author, Dyā Dviveda, comments—Yasmāt Sudāso rajño dhanam aharat (√hrñ haraṇe) acūcurad ityarthah. A strange interpretation, indeed, to say that Viśvāmitra robbed Sudās of his wealth? And what was the grief that befell Viśvāmitra, after all? He carried away the wealth that he had earned as priest; the rivers Vipāś and Śutudrī enabled him to cross over their confluence; and he and Sudās were quite safe:¹⁶³

Having thus cast a slur on the bona fides of Viśvāmitra, witness the next lesson that the author draws:

Somapānam vinā nṛṇām brāhmaṇatvam na vidyate /
Yadartham Gādhiḥ jāyāṣṭum dhanam hṛtvāvadannadīh //¹⁶⁴

And what does he tell the rivers? “Aham kuṭumbabharaṇād atiriktena dhanena somam sampādayiṣyāmīti!”—a bargain which did not become the priestly world of R̥gvedic times.

One should attain one's object by all means, is the next lesson—

Nicair nicatāro bhūtvā kāryam sādhyam vicakṣaṇaiḥ /
Gādhiḥ kārutām prāpya prabhur apyatarannadīh //¹⁶⁵

Here ‘prabhurapi’ is somewhat dubious in its import. It may mean ‘king’ or, in an adjectival sense, ‘able.’ Though quite able, Viśvāmitra assumed the rôle of a flatterer and successfully crossed the rivers.

Quite a problem is raised by the following dictum—

Guṇaprasāmsayā kāryam mahatām mānavardhanam /
Kṣipto'gnāvaribhiḥ Śaktir nendraprasāmsayā mṛtaḥ //¹⁶⁶

‘Great people should be further elevated in estimation by praising their virtues; it is thus that though thrown to the fire by the enemies, Śakti was not dead because of his praise of Indra’.

Dyā explains: Yathā pūrvam Śaktir Vasiṣṭhaputra ṛṣir Agnau jvālyamāne śatrubhiḥ Saudāsair dahanāya kṣiptas san Indra kratum ityantena pragāthārdharcena Indram praśaṁsa śiṣṭena Vasiṣṭhas ca / Tathā Indraprasāmsayā Śaktir na mṛtaḥ / Tasmān mānavardhanam abhyudayaḥ bhavati //¹⁶⁶ 162. Nītimāñjarī pp. 147-148. stanza 65. (Nītimāñjarī: ed. S. J. Joshi, published at Hari Har Maṇḍal, Kalabhairava, Benares City, 1933).

163. cf. Nir. II 24; Sarvā III 33; BD IV 105-6. R̥gvidhāna 177.

164. Nīti 66, p. 150 f.

165. Ibid 76, p. 152. f.

166. Ibid. 103, p. 223 and the com. thereon.

Dyā thinks that Śakti did not die whereas all the ancient works which refer to this incident declare that he did die. The *Bṛhaddevatā*¹⁶⁷ does not refer to Śakti's death but refers to the death of Vasiṣṭha's hundred sons caused by the Saudāsas. The Sarvā. states that Śakti was reduced to ashes,¹⁶⁸ having been thrown to the fire by the Saudāsas. Dya's rendering of the story is unauthenticated. The moral that the author propounds is too commonplace to require the remote authority of a Vedic event.

Strange things are conceived by this author Dviveda. For example,—

Kṛtāparādhaputrāṇām anyāyo na pitur hṛdi /
Pāśadyumnasya yajñasya hantṛms tuṣṭāva Vāruṇib //¹⁶⁹

Sons' wrongs do not matter to the parent is a dictum in Dyā's conception—'Delinquency on the part of sons will not affect the heart of the father. Vasiṣṭha praised his sons who put an end to Pāśadyumna's sacrifice'. The story is that Indra was present at Pāśadyumna's sacrifice and was about to partake of the Soma juice which was being pressed. Just then the sons of Vasiṣṭha, officiating at another sacrifice, pronounced such fulsome praise as made Indra leave the ready cup of Soma at Pāśadyumna's and come away to the one conducted by the Vasiṣṭhas.¹⁷⁰ Granting the efficacy of the prayers of the Vasiṣṭhas, one is compelled to question the soundness of Indra's action—Indra a god who should yield to persuasion and betray one devotee to prefer another.

Convenient shelter for unlawful actions is provided by the following advice—

Kutumbe pīḍyamāne tu dharmān nekṣeta dharmavit /
Vasiṣṭhas svāpayāmāsa yanmuṣe Vāruṇam janam //¹⁷¹

'The knower of Law should not observe the laws when the family is in distress. Vasiṣṭha sent all Varuṇa's people to sleep when he went there to steal': We shall amuse ourselves further by the author's comment—

Apyakāryaśatam kṛtvā bhartavyā ityuktatvāt / Vasiṣṭhavad akṛtyam api kṛtvā bhūṣaṇācchādānāḥ kuṭumbam toṣayet //¹⁷²

'Because it is said that (the family) shou'd be protected even by performing a hundred unwarranted deeds. One should please the family by means of ornaments and clothes, even committing a crime like Vasiṣṭha.' This recommendation is opposed to the original statement which permits a man to commit a crime when only the family is in distress. But Dyā means to suggest that even luxuries

167. BD VI 28, 31-34.

168. Sarvā. p. 25 on RV VII 32. In this hymn of Vasiṣṭha, the 10th stanza praises the gift of Paijavana Sudās, and the 26th is to be understood as having been connected with Vasiṣṭha's son Śakti's murder by Sudās's sons or followers. Something wrong with the tradition!

169. Niti 104, p. 228.

170. RV VII 33.2.

171. Niti 105, p. 230. Ref. RV VII 55, cf. fn. 21-23.

172. Śiṣya however concedes that the whole incident is based on story: "āsām prasvā-pīṇitvam tu kathāsu parikalpyate" / v.1. kathām upari kalpate. Sarvā p. 133.

may be provided by stealing. He misses on the one hand that according to Bṛhaddevatā, Vasiṣṭha was experiencing a dream and on the other, according to Śaṅguruśiṣya,¹⁷³ he entered Varuṇa's house because he was afflicted with hunger. It is perhaps a third dimensional development to bring in the family also, as a plea and excuse for crime!

The wise man must try to free himself from false allegations, just as Vasiṣṭha cleared himself by swearing and cursing:

Mithyāpavādabhaṅgāya prayateta vicakṣaṇaḥ /

Vasiṣṭhaś śapatham kṛtvā śāpam datvāmalo'bhavat //¹⁷⁴

Vasiṣṭha happened to be once charged as 'yātudhāna' by a demon who posed himself as Vasiṣṭha. The situation became so embarrassing that the real sage had to swear his identity and then curse the evil demons. Sāyaṇa informs us as follows: atra kecid āhuḥ—¹⁷⁵

Hatvā putraśatam pūrvam Vasiṣṭhasya mahātmanah /

Vasiṣṭham rākṣaso'si tvam Vasiṣṭham rūpam āsthitaḥ //

Aham Vasiṣṭha ityevam jighāmsū rākṣaso'bravīt /

Atrottarā ro¹⁷⁶ drṣṭā Vasiṣṭheneti naḥ śrutam //

Thus attacked by the Rākṣasa who killed his hundred sons and who disguised himself as the sage, Vasiṣṭha had to swear

Adyā muriya yādi yātudhāno āsmi

Yādi vāyus tatāpa pūruṣasya /

Ādhā sā viraīr daśābhīr vīyūyā

Yó mā mógham yātudhānétyāha //¹⁷⁷

"This day let me die if I am 'Yātudhāna' or if I ever injured the life of a man; and he who falsely called me 'yātudhāna' shall be bereft of ten heroes (sons)."

The same incident affords another moral—

It is the nature of bad people to revile the good; wicked indeed are those who called Vasiṣṭha a 'yātudhāna':

Durjanānām svabhāvo'yam bhīṣam nindanti yat sataḥ /

Vasiṣṭhasya durātmāno yātudhāneti ye'bruvan //¹⁷⁸

173. Rgvidhāna: Amīvaḥeti sūktena bhūtāni svapayen niśi /

Na hi prāvāpanam kiñcid idṛśam vidyate kvacit //

And Manu: Brāhmaṇas sarvavarṇebhya ādadāno na duṣyati /

Jivikātyayam āpanno yo'nnam attī yatas tataḥ / ākāśam iva pañkena na sa pātena lipyate // (X 104)

Hence Dya concludes: Tasmād Vasiṣṭhaḥ Kuṇṭhābhartham taskaro babbhūveti siddham! (Nīti, p. 236).

174. Nīti., 109, p. 240.

175. Sāyaṇa, on RV VII 104-12.

176. RV VII 104. 12-16.

177. RV VII 104.15.

178. Nīti. 110, p. 242.

Vasiṣṭha swears again—

Yó má'yātum yātudhānétyāha
Yó vā rakṣās śúcir asmītyāha /
Índras tām hantu mahatā vadhēna
Viśvasya jantór adhamás padīṣṭa //¹⁷⁹

He who calls me a fiendish demon (yātudhāna) when I am not one ; and he who calls himself Vasiṣṭha the pure, that demon may Indra smite with his great weapon ; and may he fall down beneath world's creation (i.e. to perdition).

To sum up : In these ancillary works which hold aloft the Vedic teaching and tradition, Vasiṣṭha and Viśvāmitra, as usual, enjoy high reputation for their knowledge of the divine and for their superhuman achievements. Regarding their mutual relationship viz. enmity, there is direct expression in the Bṛhaddevatā, followed by the Sarvā., the commentators Durga and Sāyaṇa, and finally the Nītimañjarī. Only Yāska does not refer to it, though he had opportunity to do so while commenting on the word "lodha" which occurs in the verse regarded as a curse against the Vasiṣṭhas. It may therefore be concluded that this Vasiṣṭha-Viśvāmitra feud acquired wide publicity and implicit belief by the time of the Bṛhaddevatā (400 B.C.)¹⁸⁰ so much so that society was prone even to expunge from the Vedic text the few verses known as 'Vasiṣṭha-dveṣiṇyaḥ.' For according to BD. "they were pronounced by Viśvāmitra as imprecations ; the Vasiṣṭhas do not hear them ; with full approval of the teachers. Great sin arises from reciting or listening to them. With them recited or heard, the head splits into a hundred bits ; their children will die. Therefore one should not recite those verses."

Parāś catasro yās tvatra Vasiṣṭha-dveṣiṇyas smṛtāḥ /
Viśvāmitreṇa tāḥ proktāḥ abhiśāpā iti smṛtāḥ /
Vasiṣṭhās tā na śṛṇvanti tad ācāryakasammatam /
Kīrtanācchravaṇād vāpi mahādoṣaś ca jāyate /
Śatadhā bhidyate mūrdhā kīrtitena śrutena vā /
Teṣāṃ bālāḥ pramīyante tasmāt tās tu na kīrtayet //¹⁸¹

In fairness to Viśvāmitra, one wonders why, in the Vasiṣṭha-maṇḍala, no hymn or verse was styled Viśvāmitra-dveṣiṇyaḥ (Viśvāmitra-haters'), specially the Rākṣoghna-sūkta¹⁸² which is full of oaths and imprecations (śapābhiśāpa-prāyam).¹⁸³ Was posterity, then, uncharitable to Viśvāmitra and partial to Vasiṣṭha ?¹⁸⁴

179. RV VII 104.16.

180. BD ed. Macdonell (HOS. 5), p. xxii f.

181. BD IV 117-120.

182. RV VII 104.

183. Sarvā. p. 27.

184. See supra.

V

RĀMĀYANA

Popular tradition about the sage Viśvāmitra as well as the sage Vasiṣṭha finds systematic expression in the Rāmāyana. The main events in the former's life are collected in the first book (Bālakāṇḍa 51-65). By the time of the Rāmāyana, Viśvāmitra impresses us as a great Brahmarṣi of established reputation. He is one of the Seven Sages, who are Brahma's favourites and whose duty is to propagate righteousness in the world, to conduct sacrifices for public weal and also to cause, through proper agencies and timely intervention, the destruction of all evil. In this last aspect their task was to extirpate the demons who were a manace all over. Through so much of roughing of life in the mundane world and so much of austerity and penance to enjoy communion with the Absolute, these sages had become embodiments of peace and righteousness, always striving for the best fulfilment of God's purpose and man's emancipation. They were God's agents on earth as it were.

Thus came Viśvāmitra, once upon a time, to pay a visit to King Daśaratha of Ayodhyā (18).¹⁸⁵ Sage Vasiṣṭha was the latter's priest. Evidently the two sages had transcended all feelings of discord between themselves and knew and respected each other's merit.¹⁸⁶ So Viśvāmitra was received with great reverence and warmth. After the usual formalities, the holy sage proposed to take the young prince Rāma to guard his sacrifice against the attacks of Mārīca and Subāhu (19). With great dismay the king begged him to leave the Prince behind; in fact, his tender affection worked itself to such an extent as to drive him to refuse to comply with the wishes of the holy sage (20). Viśvāmitra got angry; but, the far-sighted Vasiṣṭha intervened. For, being omniscient, he realised the high-minded purpose behind Viśvāmitra's proposal. Daśaratha had no alternative but to yield. Both princes, Rāma and Lakṣmaṇa were handed over to Viśvāmitra (22).

During the short period when Viśvāmitra had the princes under his care, it may be discerned that he gave them the best training which stood them in good stead later in their life's ordeal. He instructed them in the most efficacious vidyās, namely Balā and Atibalā,¹⁸⁷ and also imparted to them the knowledge of rare and powerful weapons.¹⁸⁸ Their strength and mettle were also put to the test in the fight with Tāṭakā¹⁸⁹ and then with Mārīca and Subāhu.¹⁹⁰ An acquaintance in 185. The figures in brackets indicate the relevant cantos in the Bālakāṇḍa of the Rāmāyana (with com. Tilaka. N. S. Press, Bombay, 1902).

186. cf. Rām : I 18.47, 19.2, 19.14-15, 21.10-21 Daśaratha and Vasiṣṭha both refer to Viśvāmitra being a king before and then elevated to the rank of a Brahmarṣi by means of penance (Ibid. I 18.54-55, 21.13). Vasiṣṭha pays handsome compliment when he says of Viśvāmitra—Eṣa vighrahavān dharma eṣa vīryavatām varah / Eṣa vidyādhiko loke tapasā eṣa parāyanam // (21.10)...Tenāsyā munimukhyasya dharmajñasya mahātmanah / Na kiñcid astyaviditām bhūtam bhavyam ca Rāghava // Ibid. 19.

187. Rām. I. 23.

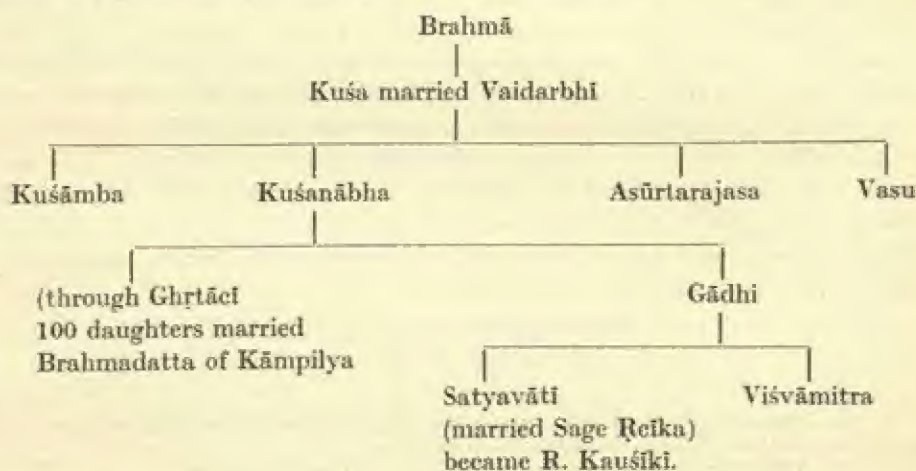

188. Ibid. I. 27-28.

189. Ibid. I. 30.

190. Ibid. I. 25-26.

their early age with the forests and the life therein was an asset. The stories related by Viśvāmītra are of absorbing interest; they well speak of the sage's vast knowledge and experience. Above all the far-sightedness of the sage proved itself in the marriage at Janaka's capital between Rāma and Sītā. The Ahalyā incident¹⁹¹ and that of lifting the Śiva-bow¹⁹² inspired the future Saviour with confidence. Thus we see that Viśvāmītra very nobly discharged his obligations—if indeed they were obligations—to Daśaratha for having spared the services of Prince Rāma!

Viśvāmītra's past history is recorded as follows: Seated on the banks of the Śoṇā in the company of other sages, on their way to Janaka's sacrifice, Viśvāmītra, in reply to Rama's question regarding the country through which they were passing, described his own pedigree.¹⁹³ Kuśa of great penance was the son of Brahmā, and he got four sons through Vaidarbhi—namely Kuśāmba, Kuśanābha, Asūrtarajasa and Vasu. Kuśāmba founded the famous ancient city of Kauśāmbī. Kuśanābha built the city called Mahodaya, Asūrtarajasa built Dharmāranya, and Vasu founded Girivraja (Magadha). Now Kuśanābha got one hundred daughters through Ghṛtācī, they being subsequently married to Brahmadata of Kāmpilya. Kuśanābha then, performed a sacrifice for obtaining a son (putrakāmeṣṭi) and got, as reward a son named Gādhi. Viśvāmītra was the son of Gādhi, who had a daughter also, called Satyavātī. Satyavātī married sage Ṛeika and ascended heaven bodily along with her husband. She then reappeared as a great river called Kauśikī. Viśvāmītra made his permanent abode on her banks; but just now had come to Siddhāśrama to perform the ten-night sacrifice. True to this statement we see that after Rāma's marriage, Viśvāmītra repairs to the Northern Mountains (jagāmottaraparvatam), to his old residence.¹⁹⁴

191. Ibid. I. 48-49.

192. Ibid. I. 66-67.

193. Ibid. I. 32-34.

194. Rām. I. 74.1 Tilaka adds "Kauśikittāṣvicchinam," not separated from the banks of the River Kauśikī.

This genealogy is later corroborated by Śatānanda's statement—

Prajāpatīsutas tvāsīt Kuśo nāma mahīpatih /
 Kuśasya putro balavān Kuśanābhas sudhārmikah /
 Kuśanābhasutas tvāsīt Gādhir ityeva viśrutaḥ /
 Gādheḥ putro mahātejā Viśvāmitro mahāmuniḥ /¹⁹⁵

Śatānanda was the chief priest of King Janaka and, he, therefore, very warmly welcomed Viśvāmitra and the princes. Having learnt of his mother Ahalyā's redemption by the grace of Śrī Rāma and in a spirit of thankfulness to Viśvāmitra for having been instrumental therein, Śatānanda describes to the princes the great exploits of the sage.

For many thousand years did Viśvāmitra of great glory rule the Earth. In one of his victorious marches, he, with all his army and retinue, met the sage Vasiṣṭha in his hermitage. After the formal reception, Vasiṣṭha invited the royal guest to partake of his hospitality. Viśvāmitra and his entire following were lavishly entertained, each one according to his taste, and were extremely pleased. All this miracle was accomplished by the one divine cow which was devoted to Vasiṣṭha. Such a wonderful thing—a gem indeed fit to be in royal possession¹⁹⁶ Viśvāmitra begged to have in lieu of a hundred thousand cows, horses, elephants, chariots, gold and precious stones. Vasiṣṭha would not part with the sacred cow for all this world. But the king demanded and tried to take her forcibly. Her own divinity supported by the sage's power of penance made it impossible for the royal intruder to gain his object. Thwarted again and again, Viśvāmitra felt most humiliated and began to smart under defeat and disgrace when all his martial glory proved absolutely of no avail (I 54-55). It is said that during the battle, a hundred of Viśvāmitra's sons attacked Vasiṣṭha with a variety of weapons, but they were all in no time reduced to ashes by a mere "hunkāra" from Vasiṣṭha (I 55.5 f.). Leaving the kingdom in charge of his sons,¹⁹⁷ Viśvāmitra did penance at the foot of the Himālayas to propitiate God Mahādeva, who ultimately granted him all the weapons available on earth at the command of gods and demons, Yakṣas and Gandharvas, and all. Armed fully in this manner, Viśvāmitra came back to wreak vengeance against his adversary. The hermitage was all destroyed; Vasiṣṭha accepted the challenge and with the help of his holy staff, set at naught the entire stock of his deadly weapons. Viśvāmitra was further humiliated with this defeat, so much so he burst out.

Dhig balam kṣatriyabalam brahmatejobalam balam /
 Ekena brahmadāṇḍena sarvāstrāṇi hatāni me //¹⁹⁸

195. Ibid. I 51. 18-19. Cf. Mbh. version the descent of Viśvāmitra which is somewhat different. Mbh. XII 49, XIII 4, see supra ch. III fn. 95.

196. 'Ratnam hi Bhagavannetaḥ ratnahāri ca pārthivaḥ' Ib. 53.9

197. Viśvāmitra had innumerable sons, evidently. A hundred were killed by Vasiṣṭha. We shall see later that while he was doing penance he got other sons Haviṣpanda, Madhuṣpanda and others. The latter name reminds us of Madhucchandas, the R̥gvedic seer. See fn. 92 of previous chapter.

198. Rām. I. 56.23.

Viśvāmitra then determined to perform severe penance such as would entitle him to Brahmahood. But he did not free himself from his hatred to Vasiṣṭha. Accompanied by the queen-consort, he went to the southern region and did severe penance. Here were born to him sons, namely Haviṣpanda, Madhuṣpanda, Dr̥ḥanetra and Mahāratha. After a thousand years, God Brahma declared his recognition of Viśvāmitra as a Royal Saint (Rājarṣi). Disappointed, Viśvāmitra set himself upon further austerities.¹⁹⁹

Meanwhile came Triśaṅku, King of Ayodhyā, seeking his help. It occurred to him once that he should sacrifice in such a manner as would elevate him bodily to heaven. Vasiṣṭha, of course, he approached for conducting such a sacrifice. Vasiṣṭha said such a thing is impossible. Then he approached Vasiṣṭha's sons who were doing penance in the south.²⁰⁰ They also replied in the negative, whereupon Triśaṅku announced his intention to find other means of realising his object. The Vasiṣṭhas became angry and cursed him to become a caṇḍāla (an outcast). Overnight he was transformed and his counsellors and retinue ran away from him. Alone but determined, Triśaṅku came to Viśvāmitra and appealed for help in order to realise his object: "Fate, I think, is more powerful, man's strength is of no avail. Fate weighs over all and is the last resort. (I have thus been reduced to a miserable condition by Fate). Please therefore redeem me from ill Fate, by means of human endeavour."

Daivam eva param manye pauruṣam tu nirarthakam /
Daivenākramyate sarvaṁ daivam hi paramā gatiḥ /
...Daivam puruṣakāreṇa nivartayitum arhasi //²⁰¹

The sage was much moved to see the king's condition and it is not strange if his own frustration was also responsible to goad him on to espouse the cause of the distressed. And so Viśvāmitra resolved to fulfil the king's wish. But—

Kṣatriyo yājako yasya caṇḍālasya viśeṣataḥ /
Katham sadasi bhoktāro haviṣ tasya surarṣayaḥ /
Brāhmaṇā vā mahātmāno bhuktvā caṇḍālabhojanam /
Katham svargam gamiṣyanti Viśvāmitreṇa pālitaḥ //²⁰²

—Such doubts naturally would arise and the Vasiṣṭhas did level the charge when the invitation for the sacrifice was extended to them. An outcast is to sacrifice, for whom a Kṣatriya is the priest, how can the gods and the ṛṣis partake of the oblations in the assembly? And the revered Brāhmans having enjoyed the hospitality given by an outcast, can they attain heaven under the protection of a Viśvāmitra? The insolence of this challenge was unbearable. Viśvāmitra cursed them all into a life of degradation for seven hundred births etc. By dint of his penance, the sacrifice was conducted according to rules; but the gods did not

199. Ibid. I. 57.9-10.

200. Rām. I. 57.

201. Ibid. I. 58.

202. Ibid. I. 59.18-15.

arrive to receive their share of the oblations. Filled with rage, Viśvāmitra declared the gift of all the merit of penance that he had so far earned and commanded Triśaṅku straightaway to fly to heaven. He did so, as all the assembly could see. But there in heaven Indra and the gods said that there was no place for him there ; and that, moreover he was condemned by the curse of his preceptor. Hence he should fall head downwards. Falling down he cried again to Viśvāmitra for protection. Then the sage grew terribly wrathful and, exerting all his supernatural powers, commanded him to stop there only in mid-air and began to create a separate heaven as if he were the Creator himself. Thus came into existence a separate group of Seven Sages and a Separate group of stars, etc. In a fit of anger, he began to proclaim :

"Anyam Indram Kariṣyāmi loko vā syād anindrakah" "I will produce another Indra or the world shall go without him!" In this grave situation, came forth all the gods, demons and sages to pacify Viśvāmitra. They struck a compromise that Triśaṅku and the new creation be recognised where they were as divinities outside the path of Vaiśvānara (Rām. I 60).

Viśvāmitra realised after the storm that his penance had been so obstructed in the South ; hence he moved on to the west to pursue his austerities near Puṣkara. Meanwhile an incident happened in Ayodhyā. The then king Ambariṣa began to sacrifice. Indra stole the victim (paśu). Either it had to be recovered and sacrificed or a human substitute found. In this situation the king wandered about and found the sage Ṛeika willing to part with a son of his, named Śunaśśepa for the price of a hundred thousand cows. We saw in the previous chapter how Śunaśśepa was taken by Ambariṣa, how, on the way at Puṣkara, the young ascetic secured the help of Viśvāmitra, in the shape of two gāthās to be recited at proper time and how in the end Śunaśśepa was released by the gods etc.²⁰³ Viśvāmitra observed penance at Puṣkara for a thousand years at the end of which God Brahmā appeared and pronounced him a Ṛṣi (I 63.2).

Seeing that the goal was yet far, Viśvāmitra resumed austerities. But this time an impediment was placed by the Apsaras Menakā, of exquisite beauty, who came to bathe in the Puṣkara. The sage gave in to cupid's call and invited the nymph to live with him in the hermitage. What more did Menakā want than a success in her trade ? Ten years elapsed before the Ṛṣi realised his folly. He dismissed Menakā however with sweet words and wended his way to the Northern Mountain. There on the banks of the Kauśikī he did severe penance for thousands of years, which arrested the attention of all. Then, on the recommendation of all gods and sages, God Brahmā welcomed him as a Mahārṣi. His bid for the title of a Brahmarṣi was not favoured because he had not yet obtained full control over his senses (I 63).

Thus, again, Viśvāmitra had to return to penance, with renewed vigour and severity. With uplifted arms, supportless and subsisting on mere air, he entered upon another thousand-year austerity. In summer he observed the vow in the midst of five fires (four on four sides and one, the Sun-god, above); in the monsoons he stood in the open and in winter he remained in water day and night. Great concern was expressed in heaven, seeing such austerity on the part of Viśvāmitra. Indra decided to put him to the test and, this time, the onerous duty fell to the lot of the Apsaras Rambhā. Though she knew the risk, she had to obey Indra and succeeded in diverting the ascetic's attention by means of her charming beauty and sweet melody. But the sage soon realised that she was another trap set by Indra, again, and in rage, cursed her to ten thousand years of existence as a mountain (64). Giving vent to his anger in this manner, he found that he had suffered frustration once more.

203. Vide ch. III on Śunaśśepa. fn. 76. cf. Rām. I 61 and 62.

Finally, we see Viśvāmitra embark upon the severest type of mortification and penance. He left the Northern regions and went to the East. For a thousand years the sage was engaged in very severe austerities and pledged to silence. He was reduced to a mere stick at the end. In spite of obstructions he never gave in for anger. At the end of the thousand years the vow of silence and starvation ended, and the sage would have a morsel of food on that day. Just when he was to partake of it, Indra in the guise of a divija came and asked for it. Without a moment's hesitation he gave all the food to the Brāhman. When nothing remained he did not mind nor said a word, but straightaway entered the last phase of his penance which was neither to eat nor even to breathe. Years lapsed and the mortification was such as the sage's head began to emit fumes. It was realised on all hands that he had stood the test. Brahmā came with all the gods and felicitated him as a BRAHMARṢI. Viśvāmitra paid homage to the God in all humility, but demanded that the Vedas, the sacred OM and Vāṣaṭ should favour him and that Vasiṣṭha should openly acknowledge his elevation. That of course Vasiṣṭha did with great pleasure. For when persons perceive Divine Light, there can be no bone of contention at all among them (65).

Those present listened to Viśvāmitra's past history with wrapt attention and amazement. Next day the great Bow of Śiva was shown to Rāma, who with permission, lifted it up with ease. The bow incidentally gave way. Rāma's performance was wonderful. As Janaka had avowed, arrangements were immediately set on foot to celebrate the marriage of Sītā with Rāma. Fleet-footed messengers were sent to Ayodhyā with invitations to king Daśaratha and all his train to come to Mithilā. Needless to say that it was a grand celebration. Vasiṣṭha and Viśvāmitra having met again moved only as friends. With the former's approval, Viśvāmitra moved for the marriage of all the four sons of Daśaratha at the same time with the daughters of Janaka and his brother Kuśadhvaṇa. After the great event, Viśvāmitra bidding farewell to the two kings returned to the Northern Mountains (66.73).

Before evaluating the Viśvāmitra-stories that appear in the Rāmāyaṇa, one point requires to be carefully remembered. From the point of view of critical scholarship, it is held that the first and the last books (i.e. Bāla and Uttara Kāṇḍas) are not genuine to the original poem. Even so the narrative in question is a later interpolation. Granting this, nevertheless, these stories have their own value because they do stand anterior to many portions of the Mahābhārata, and most of the Purāṇas. For, according to Winternitz,²⁰⁴ 'it is probable that the Rāmāyaṇa had its present extent and contents as early as towards the close of the second century A.D.' Reserving a comparative estimate of these chapters to a subsequent section, it must be said in appreciation that in no other work do we get a connected account of the events of Viśvāmitra's life. In itself the account provides a consistent biography of the sage, sufficient to portray in correct outline a great personality of Ancient Bhārata.

Vasiṣṭha is the well-known priest of the Ikṣvāku race. He is naturally held in high veneration. One finds that in the Rāmāyaṇa, there is not much of an outstanding nature in the life of the sage. His sincere devotion to the best interests of the royal house of Ayodhyā is evident. Sage Vāmadeva seems to be in close association with him. Other sages like Jābālī, Kāśyapa and even Viśvāmitra appear on occasions only. By the time of the epic, the personalities of the sages are made up. They are almost a type; they have had a great past with established holiness and reputation. The Creative period or the period of growth in the life and profession of the sages and the priests appears to have ended. They enjoy universal recognition as promoters of social well-being and divine grace. Their ultimate goal was Emancipation through penance, their earthly duty was to spread good-will and help the destruction of evil which harassed the world in the form of fiends and demons.

VI

MAHĀBHĀRATA

The theory of later interpolations notwithstanding, it must be conceded that the main theme of the Rāmāyaṇa is allowed to run smoothly without being interrupted by endless stories, discourses and disputations, as is the case with the other epic, the Mahābhārata. Between the two epics, the growth of which was surely simultaneous for a few centuries at least, all efforts at elaboration seem to have concentrated on the Mahābhārata. Ultimately it became a magnum opus whose grandeur in volume and variety has never been, nor is ever likely to be, surpassed. All that was popular in tradition as regards learning, legend, philosophy, statecraft, and the temporal and spiritual life of the land, came to be incorporated in it. We shall therefore look for exhaustive information in this work about Viśvāmitra and Vasiṣṭha, their mutual relationship as well as their individual greatness.

The Age of the Mahābhārata envisages a state of fulfilment that crowned the austerities of the Ṛṣis. Sages and ascetics pursuing a life of renunciation and seclusion in the forest abodes is still a familiar feature of the Mahābhārata life.

But Vasiṣṭha and Viśvāmitra and others of their category belonged to the hoary past as it were. By virtue of their penance, they had achieved a kind of omniscience, they were immortal. On all occasions of great moment they would be present with Indra, Brahmā and other gods. Thus we find numerous references in the Mbh. to the fact that Vasiṣṭha and Viśvāmitra were among the Seven Sages (Saptarṣis) who generally reside in the North.²⁰⁵ The following were present, for instance, at the time of Arjuna's birth : Sapta caiva maharṣayaḥ—

Bharadvājaḥ Kaśyapa Gautamaś ca Viśvāmitro Jamadagnir Vasiṣṭhaḥ /

Yaś codito Bhāskare'bhūt praṇaṣṭe So'pyatrātrir bhagavān ājagāma //

(I 123.51)

They were again among those who surrounded Bhīṣma,²⁰⁶ when he was lying on the bed of arrows. Vasiṣṭha's name is specially associated with Bhīṣma, who obtained from him the knowledge of the Vedas and their branches (vedāṅgas)²⁰⁷ and who is described as (Vasiṣṭha-sikṣita) Vasiṣṭha's pupil.²⁰⁸ This looks somewhat strange when we are told that Bhīṣma was one of the Vasus, named Dyaus, born on earth on account of Vasiṣṭha's curse, the offence being that in one of their perambulations, Dyaus caused Vasiṣṭha's sacred cow (homadhenu) to be taken away from the sage's hermitage.²⁰⁹ Vasiṣṭha cursed the Vasus saying that they

205. Mahābhārata references in this section are to be found in the Citrasālā Edition, Poona, with Nīlakaṇṭha's commentary called Bhārata bhāvadīpa. Vas. and Viś. among the seven sages of the North will be found in Mbh. I 123.51, 233.29, III 163.15, 224.26, XII 122.31, 208.32-33, 335.29, XIII 93.88, 96; 126.42-49, 150.38-39, 165.44, XIV 27.18 etc., etc.

206. Mbh. XII 47.7, XIII 26.4, 5.

207. Ibid. I 100.35-39.

Vedān adhijage sāṅgān Vasiṣṭhād eṣa vṛyavān /
Kṛtāstrāḥ parameṣvāso devarājasamo yudhī //

208. Ibid. XII 37.11.

Bhārgavāc Cyavanāc cāpi Vedān aṅgapabṛmhitān /
Pratīpede mahābāhur Vasiṣṭhāc caritavratāḥ //

It is interesting to note that Bhīṣma was reputed to have seen in person Indra and other gods (sākṣād dadarśa yo devān sarvān Indrapurogamān); he saw the devarṣis many times (asakṛt), obtained knowledge of things from the very propounders of śāstras : thus Uśanas taught him Rājadharmā, as also Bṛhaspati, the preceptor of the gods, Veda and Vedāṅgas he learnt from Vasiṣṭha and Cyavana, adhyātma from (Sanat) Kumāra, yatidharma from Mārkaṇḍeya, weapons from Rāma (Jāmadagnya) and Śakra. He would meet Death by his own will (Ibid. XII 37.8-16).

In another context Kṛṣṇa pays him great compliment. He urges Yudhiṣṭhira to visit Bhīṣma on his bed of arrows and learn from him higher knowledge :

Tasmīnnastamite Bhīṣme Kauravāpām dhurandhare /
Jñānānyastam gamiṣyanti tasmāt tvām codayāmyaham //
Cāturvidyam cāturotram cāturāśramyam eva ca /
Rājadharmāmś ca nikhilān pṛechainam pṛthivīpate // (XII 46.22-23).

209. Mbh. I 98.19.

Ime'stau Vasavo devā mahābhāgā mahaujasah /
Vasiṣṭhaśāpadoṣeṇa mānuṣatvam upagatāḥ //

The details of the incident are given in the next canto (I 99). Āpava Vasiṣṭha, having cursed them to a life on earth, relents indeed when the Vasus pleaded guilty. So he revised the curse :

"Anusamvatsarāt sarve śāpamokṣam avāpsyatha /
Ayam tu yatkrte yūyam mayā śaptāḥ sa vatsyati //
Dyaus tadā mānuṣe loke dīrghakālam svakarmaṇā //

(Ibid. I 99.33-39).

should be born on earth, but added that only Dyaus should dwell on for a long time. Story goes on to say that the Vasus prevailed upon the divine river Gaṅgā, that she, having borne them to king Śāntanu, should throw them into the water, except the eighth. This eighth child was Devavrata otherwise known as Bhīṣma.²¹⁰

Vasiṣṭha and Viśvāmitra are mentioned among the great sages who expect Yudhiṣṭhira to visit them during his pilgrimage.²¹¹ With the sage Lomaśa for his guide, the exile king visited their āśramas, which may be regarded as their permanent abodes for all time.²¹² Situated as these were on river banks, they were rendered holy by the austerities of the saints and were reputed as holy places of pilgrimage.²¹³ Ācārya Droṇa invoked the blessings of Vasiṣṭha and Viśvāmitra on Duryodhana for a victory over Arjuna.²¹⁴ Later as the Great Battle progressed, Vasiṣṭha and Viśvāmitra were among the Seven Sages who came to carry away the departed Droṇa to Heaven.²¹⁵ The Bisastainyopaniṣat (the mystery of the theft of the lotus stalk) records a peculiar experience for the Seven Sages who went round on a tour. They were once confronted by a Yātudhānī who intending to kill them, put them to a test when they were all hungry and thirsty and wanted to refresh themselves with the lotus stalks and water in a lake over which she kept watch. Each one of the party was to announce his or her name, (Arundhati also accompanied them), which was done with a certain sense of humour. Incident-

210. Ibid I 96. 15-19.

Na tacehakyam nivartayitum yaduktam brahmavādinā /
Tvam asmān mānuṣi bhūtvā srja putrān vasūn bhuvi /
Na mānuṣiṇām jaṭharam praviṣema vayam śubhe /

Pratipasya suto rājā Śāntanur lokaviśrutah /
Bhavitā mānuṣe loke sa naḥ kartā bhaviṣyati /

Jātān Kumārān svān apsu prakṣeptum vai tvam arhasi /
yathā na cirakālam no niṣkṛtiḥ syāt trilokage /

Ibid. I 99.45-7 (Later) Gaṅgā to Śāntanu :

Ayam śāpād ṛṣes tasya eka eva nṛpottama /
Dyau rājan mānuṣe loke ciram vatsyati Bhārata /
Sa tu Devavrato nāma Gāṅgeya iti cābhavat /
Dyunāmā Śāntanoḥ putras Śāntanor adhiko guṇaiḥ //

211. Ib. II 85.119-120. Ete ṛṣivarāḥ sarve tvatpratiksṣās tapodhanāḥ.

212. Ib. III 110.20,22. The āśramas or hermitages are mentioned in several contexts. cf. I 215.2 (Vasiṣṭhasya ca parvatam), III 82.56, 102.3 etc.

213. Ib. III 82.56 (a Vas. tirtha on Mt. Arbuda), 83.139 (Viś. tirtha, bathing where, one becomes a Brāhman), 179 (Badarapācana of Vas.), 84.48 (Vas.), 131 (Kausikī), 87.13 (Utpalāvana Viś. became Brahman), 139.17 (Ujjācaka, Vas. with Arundhati).

214. Mbh. 94.39 et. seq. Sañjaya uvāca—(to Dhṛtarāṣṭra)

Evam uktvā tvaran Droṇaḥ spṛṣṭvāmbho varma bhāṣvaram /
Ābabandhād bhutatamam japan mantram yathāvidhi /
Rage tasmin sumahati vijayasya sutasya te / Visismāpayiṣur lokān vidyayā brahmavittamaḥ /

Asito Devalas caiva Viśvāmitras tathāṅgirāḥ /
Vasiṣṭhaḥ Kaśyapaś caiva svasti kurvantu te nṛpa //

215. Ibid. VII 190.83.

ally, Viśvāmitra introduces himself as a friend of the Viśvedevas and of the Kine ; Vasiṣṭha is most excellent and he lives as a great householder.²¹⁶ The Yātudhāni was, of course, killed by a wayfarer called Śunassakha²¹⁷ (accompanied by a dog) who joined them on the way and was no other than Indra in disguise ! The sages figure again in a similar funny incident which may be called " Puṣkarastainya " (stealing of the lotus), but designated ' Śapathavidhi ' in the books. Here again comes Indra to solve the mystery. The sages of earth and heaven swore by many things sacred to say that they did not commit the theft of the puṣkara. Indra was the thief, of course, and apologised in the end that he devised this incident in order to hear from them the acts and principles of Dharma, by which they swore, but which, as the world could realise, constituted the basis of all righteousness.²¹⁸

Viśvāmitra is mentioned among departed kings, who lived a glorious life on earth, performed sacrifices, and ascended heaven, as enumerated by Sañjaya to Dhṛtarāṣṭra, so that he might take consolation in his sad bereavement.²¹⁹ Further, Viśvāmitra as a king who became a Brahmarṣi by his austere penance is often times remembered in the Mahābhārata.²²⁰ He is also credited with doing a good

216. Ibid. XIII 93—

Viśvedevāś ca me mitram mitram asmi gavām tatbā /
Viśvāmitram iti khyātam yātudhāni nibodha mām //
Vasiṣṭho'smi vasiṣṭho'smi vase vāśagrheṣvapi /
Vasiṣṭhatvāc ca vāsac ca Vasiṣṭha iti viddhi mām //

Cf. Nīlakaṇṭhīya : vāśagrheṣu vāśayogyeṣu grhaṣṭhāśrameṣu / The touring party consisted of the seven sages with the revered Arundhatī, a maid servant named Gaṇḍā and her husband Paśusakha.

217. Ibid XIII 93.106—Śunassakha declares himself thus before the Yātudhāni—

Ebhīr uktam yathā nāma nāham vaktum ihotsahe /
Śunassakhasakhāyam mām Yātudhānyavadhāraya //

Com. śvā dharmah / tatsakhāyo munayah, teṣāṃ sakhā śunassakhasakhah (Indrah). Yama, the God of Dharma, appearing as a dog is a familiar feature. The dog that followed Yudhiṣṭhira in his final journey was Dharma himself. In the present context it happens that the wandering mendicant (Śunassakha) was accompanied by a dog. In reality he was Indra in disguise, and Indra is named Śunāsira which has some Vedic basis. It is interesting to study the semantic history of the words Śunam and śvan. An attempt is made in the foregoing chapter on Śunāśepa.

218. Mbh. XIII 94. Here also was a party on pilgrimage, but consisted of royal saints as well as the Brāhmaṇa saints. Indra said in the end—Na mayā bhagavan lobhāddhṛtam puṣkaram adya vai / Dharamāms tu śrotukāmena hṛtam na kroddhum arhasi //

219. Mbh. I 1.227 (Viśvāmitram amitraghnam Ambariṣam mahābalaṃ). Again (XIV 91.34) Śrūyante hi purā vṛttā Viśvāmitrādayo nṛpāḥ / Viśvāmitro'sitas caiva Janakaś ca mahipatiḥ /

220. I. 71.29 (Kṣatrarājāś ca yah pūrvam abhavad brāhmaṇo balāt). This appears to be an anomaly, however. The context is Indra deputing Menakā to obstruct Viśvāmitra's penance ; Menakā pleads fear of a sage of such attainments. Viśvāmitra became a Brahmarṣi only after transcending earthly passions. Here he succumbs to Menakā's blandishments and begets Śakuntalā, the immortal heroine of Kālidāsa's masterpiece. Compare, further, (a) Mbh. I 137.14 (Viśvāmitra is an example of Brāhmaṇas born of Kṣatriyas :

Kṣatriyebhyaś ca ye jātā Brāhmaṇāś te ca te śrūtāḥ /
Viśvāmitraprabhṛtayah prāptā brāhmaṭvam avyayam //

(b) I 175.47-48. By means of penance Viśvāmitra obtained success, having paralysed the worlds with his brilliance ; he attained Brāhmaṇhood, what is more, partook of the soma in Indra's company (Apibacca tatas somam Indreṇa saha Kauśikah). (c) III 87.13, 15-17. It was on the banks of the Kauśiki that Viśvāmitra, rich in penance, became a Brahman. He then celebrated many sacrifices on the Ganges, in the pāñcālas at Utpalāvāna, and even at Kānyakubja turn to the wives of six of the Seven Sages, the exception being Arundhatī. It happened that the God of Fire fell in love with the wives of the divine sages, while coming out of a sacrificial rite which the gods were performing in order to find a suitable general for the divine army.²²¹ Finding it delicate to make advances to those innocent souls, he tried to derive pleasure by seeing and touching them in his capacity of the Gārhapatya Fire.²²² Not satisfied with this, however, he repaired to a forest to do away with himself. But Svāhā, daughter of Dakṣa, who had where he quaffed soma with Indra and declared that he a ksatriya had risen high to become a Brāhmaṇa (Kānyakubje'pibat somam Indreṇa saha Kauśikāḥ / tataḥ Kṣatrād apākramāt Brāhmaṇo'smiti cābravīt //). (d) V 106.18. It is said that Viśvāmitra in the final stages of his austerities stood the test of Dharma who appeared in the guise of Vasiṣṭha: from the state of Kṣatriya, Viśvāmitra attained the state of a Brāhmaṇa (Kṣatrabhāvād apagato brāhmaṇatvam upāgataḥ / Dharmasya vacanāt prito Viśvāmitras tathā'bhavat //). (e) IX 39.25,37. Balarāma during his tour came to the hermitage of Ruṣaṅga on the banks of Sarasvatī where Ārṣṭiṣeṇa did penance and where also Viśvāmitra attained brāhmaṇhood. Sindhudvīpa and Devāpī also became Brāhmaṇas at this holy place. (f) XIII 3.2; 4.48. In answer to a question by Yudhiṣṭhira, Bhīṣma explains the lineage of Viśvāmitra and how he became a Brahman. He means to suggest that apart from his achievements, there was Brahman in his blood, he having been born by the grace of the sage R̥ṣika (XIII 4). Further, Viśvāmitra, Bhīṣma informs, founded a race of Brahmanavādins; 62 sons of them are named—
Bull DCRI xi-20

Viśvāmitram cājanayad Gādhibhāryā Yaśasvinī /
R̥ṣeṣ prasādād rājendra brahmarṣeṣ brahmanavādinam //
Tato brāhmaṇatām yāto Viśvāmitro mahātapaḥ //

(g) XIII 18.16 f. Viśvāmitra is said to have declared to the son of Pāṇdu that he became a Brāhmaṇa by the grace of Śiva. Other sages in turn relate how they were favoured by this God, the purpose of all being to bring home to Yudhiṣṭhira the efficacy of worshipping Śiva. (h) XIII 30.2. (i) XIII 55.31, 56.12 ff. Once in Gods' assembly, Brāhmā declared that there will be Brahma-Kṣatra admixture in the Kuśika race. Sage Cyavana heard this, determined to destroy the whole race before the thing could happen, and, with the privilege of his being a sage, put king Kuśika to untold hardship. He wanted to find some pretext by which he could curse him to extinction. But Kuśika's steadfastness and devotion were remarkable. So Cyavana, believing in the inevitable, came to favour him. The third in his line would become a Brāhmaṇa (Tṛtīyam puruṣam tubhyam brāhmaṇatvam gamiṣyati st. 31). Further questioned by Kuśika, Cyavana explained that his grand-daughter would bear a Brāhmaṇa with Kṣatriya instincts and that his son Gādhi would be favoured with Viśvāmitra for his son, a Kṣatriya with Brāhmaṇa achievements.

Gādher duhitaram prāpya pautrīm tava mahātapaḥ /
Brāhmaṇam Kṣatradharmāṇam putram utpādayiṣyati /
Kṣatriyam viprakarmāṇam Brhaspatim ivaujaśā /
Viśvāmitram tava kule Gādheḥ putram sudharmikam /
Tapasā mahatā yuktam pradāsyti mahādūte // (st. 11-13).

(j) XIII 106.68. Commending the upavāsavidhi (vow of fasting) Bhīṣma cites the instance of Viśvāmitra who attained Brāhmaṇhood by sustaining himself on a single meal (a day ?) for a thousand celestial years:

Divyavarṣasahasrāṇi Viśvāmitreṇa dhīmatā /
Kṣāntam ekena bhaktena tena vipratvam āgataḥ //

221. Represented as Brahma's daughter, Devasenā, the other daughter being Daityasenā who was carried away by the demon Keśin. (III 224.1).

222. It is well-known that in the Gṛhya rites, the householder is always accompanied by the wife (samanvārabdhā).

Bhūyas sañcintayāmāsa na nyāyām kṣubhito hyaham /
Sādhyah patnyo dvijendrāṇām akāmāḥ kāmāyamyaham /
Naitāś śakyā mayā draṣṭum spraṣṭum vāpyanimitataḥ /
Gārhapatyam samāviśya tasmāt paśyāmyabhīkṣṇasāḥ /
Samspraṇniva sarvās tāḥ śikhābhīḥ kāñcanaprabhāḥ /
Paśyamānaś ca mumude gārhapatyam samāśritāḥ //

Mbh. III 224.34-36.

in vain loved him, now resolved upon assuming the guise of the wives of the seven ṛṣis. Svāhā first gratified her desire in the guise of Śivā the wife of Āngiras, and then, lest somebody should unduly suspect the Brāhmaṇa ladies, she went out of the forest as a bird (suparṇi), and on the Śveta mountain that was covered with lumps of reeds and guarded by serpents, monsters and fiends, she threw the semen which she held in her hand into a golden basin. Then assuming successively the form of five of the others, she did the same on the first lunar day (pratipat). Only the form of Arundhatī she was unable to assume because of her ascetic merit and devotion to her husband. The semen thrown on the Śveta mountain produced a child, whom the Ṛṣis called Skanda, with six heads.... Terrific prodigies were seen everywhere. Everybody accused the wives of the six sages, others accused the female eagle as being the cause thereof, but nobody suspected Svāhā. The Ṛṣis divorced their wives with the exception of Arundhatī, though Svāhā claimed the child as hers. Viśvāmitra, having concluded the sacrifice of the seven ṛṣis, had secretly followed the god of fire and knew everything as it had happened. He sought the protection of Skanda and performed for him the thirteen auspicious rites of childhood. Though Viśvāmitra informed the seven ṛṣis of the innocence of their wives yet they abandoned them unconditionally.²²³

Viśvāmitra had a very devoted pupil in the person of Gālava.²²⁴ This pupil happened to serve him loyally even in his difficult circumstances. Finally Viśvāmitra blessed him to go, but Gālava requested the teacher to state the fee (guru-dakṣiṇā). The teacher was content but the earnest pupil pressed his request. With a little displeasure as it were, Viśvāmitra asked Gālava to present him with 800 white horses with one ear black.²²⁵ This was an impossibility. When he was feeling desperate, Suparṇa came to his assistance. He offered to take him on his back anywhere he wished, so that he might collect the rare type of animal from several kings and then meet the wishes of his teacher. After much wandering, they came to king Yayāti of Pratiṣṭhāna and Suparṇa made the request on behalf of Gālava. His recommendation was weighty, but Yayāti had no horses of that description. He offered, instead, his beautiful daughter Mādhāvi, setting whom as price, they could easily get the 800 horses from kings who have them. Seeing her beauty kings would even part with their kingdoms.²²⁶ At this stage when some way to success was found Suparṇa took leave of Gālava. With the maiden Mādhavi then, Gālava set out and went to Haryaśva king of Ayodhyā, who was childless.

223. Mbh. III Chs. 224 to 226, relevant portions. Viśvāmitra himself being one of the seven sages, he at least must have granted pardon for his wife! cf. Rām. I 36-37 regarding the birth of Skanda. The version is brief, there is no reference to the sages' wives being involved.

224 Mbh. V Chs. 106 to 119—Gālavacarita.

225. Ekataḥ śyāmakarṇānāṃ hyānām candravareasām /
Aṣṭau śātāni me dehi gaccha Gālava mā ciraṃ // Mbh. V. 106.27.

226. Iyam surasutaprakhyā sarvadharmopacāyini /
Sadā devamanuṣyāṇām asurāṇām ca Gālava /
Kāṅkṣitā rūpato bālā sutā me pratigṛhyatām /
Asyās śulkaṃ pradāsyanti nṛpā rājyaṃ api dhruvam / kim punaś śyāmakarṇānām hayānām dve catuṣṣate //
(V. 115.11-13).

There he offered him the maiden for the price of 800 white horses with one ear black. The king had only two hundred and therefore proposed that he would beget only one son by her. Mādhavi revealed to Gālava that she had a boon from a sage that she would revert to virginhood after every childbirth, and that he might collect the required number from four kings if he liked. Readily the terms were accepted. Haryaśva got a son Vasuprada by name. From Haryaśva, they went to Divodāsa of Kāśī and then to Auśinara²²⁷ of Bhojanagara. But a fourth king they could not find. Suparna came again and advised that he should take the collection hitherto made to Viśvāmītra and offer Mādhavi herself in lieu of the balance due, if that would please him. It was timely advice; Viśvāmītra was pleased and in fact asked why he did not offer her first to him; he could have got four sons to propagate his race!²²⁸ It is said that Viśvāmītra was pleased to beget a son (Aṣṭaka) on Mādhavi and discharge the pupil of his obligations. The virgin was then restored to her father Yayāti, and Gālava went to penance.

On account of Viśvāmītra, it is reported that Indra lost his testicles which afterwards were substituted with those of a ram.²²⁹

In the thirty-sixth year after the Battle, a few sages, Viśvāmītra, Kapva and Nārada happened to visit Dvārakā, Kṛṣṇa's city. Seeing this, some young men of the Vṛṣṇi clan, Sāraṇa and others, tried to insult them. They dressed one among themselves (Sāmba) as a woman and asked the sages what kind of child she would bear forth. Discovering their trick, the sages cursed them to destruction: that Sāmba would bring forth an iron club which will cause the destruction of the Vṛṣṇyandhakas except Balarāma and Kṛṣṇa; Dvāraka will be overwhelmed by the sea; Death stalks the city, which has become demoralised, the people, giving way to drink at a festival, slay one another.²³⁰

The Pativratopākhyāna records²³¹ an amusing story of how a woman taught the Brāhman Kauśika that a wife's chief duty is to her husband, even before Brāhmaṇas. Once a Brāhman, Kauśika by name, learned in the Vedas and the 227. Auśinara's son was the famous king Śibi (118.20) Divodāsa's son was Pratardana.

228. 4 Kim iyaṃ pūrvam evēha na dattā mama Gālava /
Putrā mamaiva catvāro bhavēyuh kulabhāvanāḥ /
Partigṛhṇāmi te kanyām ekaputrāphalāya vai /
Aśvāś cāśramam āśūdyā carantu mama sarvaśaḥ //
(119.16-17).

229. Mbh. XII 342.23.

Ahalyādharaṇanimitam hi Gautamāddharīśmaśrutām Indrah prāptaḥ Kauśikanimitam cendro muṣkaviyogam meṣavṛṣṇatvam cāvāpa // How Kauśika comes in this Indra-Ahalyā incident is not clear. Sorensen thinks that Indra was reduced to that state by the curse of Viśvāmītra (Kauśikanimitam). Index Vol. II, p. 729. According to the Rāmāyaṇa, it was Gautama's curse that made him 'viphalā' (petatur Vṛṣṇau bhūmau sahasrākṣasya tatkaṣaṇāt). Then the gods under the leadership of Agni "utpātya meṣavṛṣṇau sahasrākṣe nyavesayan." (Rām. I cantos 48 and 49).

230. Ibid. XVI chs. 1 to 3.

231. Ibid. III chs. 205 to 216. It is clear that the Brāhman Kauśika who figures in this upākhyāna is not the famous Rāj Viśvāmītra though both are Kauśikas. The former is evidently one belonging to the Brāhman families which were founded by Viśvāmītra and belongs to a period far removed from the founder-sage and nearer the age of the Mahābhārata composition. The story may even be a later interpolation.

Upaniṣads, was reciting them as he was seated under a tree. A crane from above dropped dirt on him. Wrathful, he looked at the bird which at once fell down dead. Sad, however, he went his way and came to the village for alms. There in a house, the lady was busy washing the utensils and therefore, asked the Brāhman to stay while she would come up and offer alms. Meanwhile the husband came; she, at once, addressed herself to attend upon him, offering the arghya, pādya etc. This took some time, and when the lady came to give alms to the Brāhman, he severely objected to her inordinate delay in honouring the Brāhman, who is an object of veneration even for Indra. And Brāhmans are like fire; they would reduce to ashes, the entire earth! With these words he looked at her fiercely. But the pativaratā coolly replied—

Nāham balākā viprarṣe tyaja krodham tapodhana /
 Anayā kruddhayā dṛṣṭyā kruddhaḥ kim mām kariṣyasi /
 Nāvajānāmyaham viprān devais tulyān manasvinah /
 Aparādhām imam vipra kṣantum arhasi me'nagha /

* * *

Patiśuśrūṣayā dharmo yas sa me rocate dvija /
 Daivateṣvapi sarveṣu bhartā me daivatam param //²³²

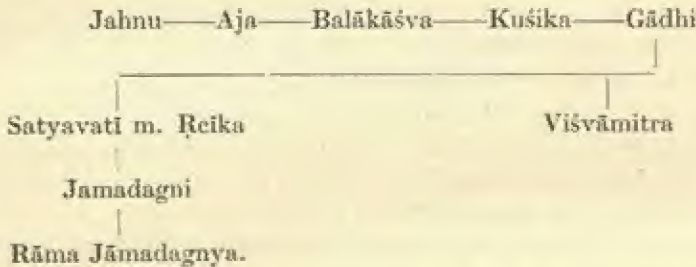

"I am not the crane, O sage; give up your anger. What indeed would you do for me with your angry looks? Brāhmans I will not disregard, for they are high-minded and equal to the gods. Do forgive this mistake, O sinless one. ...What dharma there is in attending upon the husband I like very much. Of all the gods, the husband alone is pre-eminent for me." She further advised Kauśika to go to Dharmavyādha (the Righteous Hunter) in Mithilā and learn from him all the dharmas. The Brāhman was much ashamed at this discomfiture, but took the lady's advice in good spirit and went to dharmavyādha. The wisdom that he preached was as follows:

- (a) that it is possible to live a virtuous life even though one's profession is to sell meat,
- (b) that sincere repentance cleanses from sin,
- (c) the marks of virtuous conduct,
- (d) that there is justification for the killing of animals and eating their flesh,
- (e) concerning the law of Karma, the eternity of the soul, re-incarnation and emancipation,
- (f) of Brahma-vidyā—the elements, guṇas, prāṇas, etc. and that the relation of the soul to the senses is like that of a charioteer to his horses,
- (g) of the great merit of dutifulness to parents, and that character is more important than caste.²³³

232. Mbh. III 206.23-24, 30.

233. Mbh. III Chs. 205-216. See G. P. Rice's Index to the Mahābhārata (OUP 1934.)

Describing the exploits of Paraśurāma to Yudhiṣṭhira, Vāsudeva (Kṛṣṇa) traces his lineage²³⁴ to which Viśvāmitra also belongs. Jahnu's son was Aja (Ajamiḍha ?) and his son was Balākāśva. Kuśika was Balākāśva's son. Kuśika performed austerities with the object of gaining a son like Indra. The latter preferred to take upon himself the honour of becoming Kuśika's son. Thus was the famous Gādhi born. Gādhi begot a daughter called Satyavati who was married to Ṛṣi Ṛeika. This sage prepared the holy caru in order to obtain progeny. As Satyavati's mother also desired the favour of a son, the sage prepared the sacred food in two parts, prescribing one to his wife and the other to his mother-in-law. But this lady manœuvred to exchange her caru with that of the daughter whereby the progeny would be born with strange attributes. The mother-in-law i.e. Gadhi's Queen who was a Kṣatriya woman would bring forth a son full of Brāhmanic splendour and Satyavati, a ṛṣipatni, would bear a son full of martial strength and glory. On the latter pleading for mercy, it was granted that her grandson would be born with these attributes, while the son would be a Brahmvādin. Thus Viśvāmitra a Kṣatriya with Brāhmanic attainments became the son of Gādhi; Jamadagni was born to Ṛeika, the famous Rāma Jāmadagnya (Paraśurāma) was Jamadagni's son who was a Brāhman with Kṣatriya instincts.

234. The same subject is dealt with in a later context, the narrative being ascribed to Bhīṣma (XIII 4). The account is slightly elaborated. (a) The exchange of the carus and the trees (aśvattha and Udumbara) which they had to clasp was due to sophistry on the part of the mother of Satyavati. There is a slight discrepancy in the genealogy : the family is said to emanate from Bharata, the regular descent being traced from Ajamiḍha downwards i.e. Ajamiḍha—Jahnu—Sindhuvīpa—Balākāśva—Kuśika—Gādhi etc. Ajamiḍha is here the father of Jahnu, not son. Jahnu's son is Sindhuvīpa who is not known in the other account. Compare also the Rāmāyṇa version—Rām. I 51.18-19. See supra. (b) A more flagrant departure is indicated in another context viz. Mbh. III 115 according to which the person who grants the caru and prescribes the trees is Bhṛgu himself, the father of Ṛeika, this seems to be unnatural and rather unjust to the son who was also a sage of no mean attainments, one who, by Varuṇa's grace, produced, as dowry for the bride whom he loved to marry, a thousand white horses with one of the ears black.

Tatas snuṣām sa bhabavān prahr̥ṣṭo Bhṛgur abravīt /
 Varuṇ vṛṇiṣva subhage dātā hyasmi tavapsitam /
 Sā vai prasādayāmāsa tam gurum putrakāraṇāt /
 Ātmanaś caiva mātus̥ ca prasādam ca cakāra saḥ /
 (Sts. 33-34).

(c) Ṛeika's son became son of Viśvāmitra (Viśvāmitrasya putratvam Ṛeikatanayo'gamat Mbh. XII 292.13). This legend refers to Śunaśśeṣa being adopted by Viśvāmitra as his eldest son. According to some Śunaśśeṣa was Ṛeika's son ; according to others, he was the son of Ajigarta. Śunaśśeṣa was also said to be a middle son. The anomaly arising out of this varied account has been fully discussed in the previous chapter.

Viśvāmitra was the progenitor of a number of Brāhman families. One of his sons, Aṣṭaka, seems to have continued his Kṣatriya heritage. But his adoption of Śunaśśepa Devarāta as the eldest of all his sons is extolled as one of his glorious achievements. This has been exhaustively dealt with in the previous chapter.

Like the Brāhman Kauśika in the Pativratoṣādhyaṇa, we find Viśvāmitra in another humiliating situation. It was a twelve-year famine, when the people had been reduced to nothingness. Famished with hunger and thirst, Viśvāmitra had to forsake his wife and children and wander about for his own sustenance. At last in the outskirts of a village he found the door of a cāṇḍāla's hut open and saw also a quartered dog's leg (śvajāghani) hanging. So taken up with hunger, Viśvāmitra decided to seize the Śvajāghani and eat it. Then follows a conversation between the sage and the cāṇḍāla in which the latter appeals to the former to exercise control in the interest of Dharma, for he was not only trying to eat a forbidden thing but also taking it from a man of the low caste. Viśvāmitra's conviction was only that in time of calamity there is no dharma to count; to save one's life one may transgress the law for the moment. On coming back home, he changed his plan and decided to offer the thing first to the gods and then partake of what remains. As he was about to do this, as if that he had sufficiently tested the sage's will or as if he thought it beneath himself to eat forbidden flesh, Indra sent showers of rain immediately. The scorched earth was quenched; the sage had not got to taste the abhakṣya (anāśvādyā ca taddhaviḥ). So when calamity befalls, the wise man, should extricate himself by all means at his command. One should at all events live; and, alive only one attains merit and prosperity.²³⁵

Let us now turn to study Vasiṣṭha's greatness as revealed in the Mahābhārata. Vasiṣṭha is Brahman's mind-born son²³⁶ (Brahmaṇo mānasaḥ putraḥ) and husband of Arundhatī and also designated one of the prajāpatis, having a place in the court of Brahma. He is also among those who have become pure souls by virtue (dharmaṇaiva sucetasah). "Kāma (desire) and Krodha (anger), who cannot be vanquished even by the immortals, used to shampoo his feet. Though his wrath was excited by Viśvāmitra's offence, he did not yet exterminate the Kuśikas. Afflicted 235. Mbh. XII 141 (Āpaddharmaparva, conduct in time of calamity—

Āhūya devān Indrādīn bhāgam bhāgam vidhikramāt /
 Etasminneva kūle tu pravavarṣa ca Vāsavaḥ / x x x
 Sa samhṛtya ca tat karma anāśvādyā ca taddhaviḥ /
 Toṣayāmāsa devānś ca pitṛnś ca dvijasattamaḥ /
 Evam vidvan adinātmā vyasanastho jījīviṣuḥ /
 Sarvopāyair upāyājñō dūram ātmānam uddharet /
 Etām buddhim samāsthāya jīvitavyam sadā bhavet /
 Jīvan puṇyam avāpnōti puruṣo bhadram āsnuते /

(Sts. 99-101).

E. P. Rice thinks that Viśvāmitra "ate cāṇḍāla food and justified the act." This is however contrary to the text. (Rice's Index, p. 54). A famine in which great sages like Viśvāmitra are prostrate should indeed be terrible. The Rgveda records the instance of Vāmadeva (Seer of the Sixth Maṇḍala) who, in similar plight, cooked the entrails of a dog—(Śuna āntrāṇi pece). But Viśvāmitra lived on mere nir for a thousand years and never breathed at all for a thousand years more! Which of the reports could be true is a thing to wonder.

236. Cf. Mbh. I 174.5, II 11.18-19, III 31.12, VII 6.6, XII 166.15-16, 208.32, 334.36, 340.69.

at the loss of his sons, he did not do any dreadful deed for the destruction of Viśvā-mitra. He did not transgress Kṛtānta (Death) in order to bring back his lost children from the abode of Yama. It was by obtaining him that the Ikṣvākus acquired this earth and with him as their purohita, they performed many great sacrifices.²³⁷ Vasiṣṭha distinguished himself as purohita of other kings also. To king Saṁvarāṇa he did a favour by prevailing upon Sūrya to give his daughter Tapatī in marriage.²³⁸ As purohita to Mucukūṇḍa, who conquered the earth and ruled by might only, he did penance and killed all the demon hosts let loose by Kubera.²³⁹ At another time he was pleased with Rantideva and when there was terrible draught in the country, he sustained the people like the very lord of Creatures.²⁴⁰ With the co-operation of sage Vāmadeva, he accompanied Bharata to the forest to bring Rāma back and later, anointed Rāma Dāśarathi on the throne²⁴¹ and also worshipped Kṛṣṇa while he was on his mission to Duryodhana,²⁴² performed a sacrifice for Kuru in Kurukṣetra on the River Sarasvatī.²⁴³ Vasiṣṭha is further reputed to be the propagator of one of four original gotras.²⁴⁴ He caused the Sarayū river to flow on earth.²⁴⁵ Sage Parāśara was his grandson²⁴⁶ and the great Vyāsa was the son of Parāśara.²⁴⁷ In heaven Vasiṣṭha did yeoman service to Indra, fighting with the demon Vṛtra; Indra became unconscious once; at that time did Vasiṣṭha revive him with the Rathantara-Sāma.²⁴⁸

Apart from his being Brahma's mind-born son, Vasiṣṭha is said to have arisen from the seed of the gods which Kṛṣṇa caused to fall into a jar; so Bhīṣma explains while expatiating on the greatness of Śrī Kṛṣṇa.²⁴⁹ The birth of the sage took place in the Eastern direction, there he became famous and there did he depart

237. Ibid. I 174.5-11.

238. Ibid. I 94.42-45, 173.26.

239. XII 74.6-7.

240. XII 234.17, XIII 137.6.

241. III 277.37, 291.66.

242. V 83.27.

243. IX 38.27.

244. XII 296.17.

Mūlagotrāṇi catvāri samutpannāni pāṛthiva /
Aṅgirāḥ Kaśyapaś caiva Vasiṣṭho Bhṛgur eva ca //

245. XIII 155.21.

246. I 178.3 Son of Śakti by Adṛśyanti XII 349.6.

247. XIII 24.8.

248. XII 281.21.

249. Mbh. XIII 158.19—

Tasyāntarikṣam pṛthivī divam ca /
Sarvam vaśe tiṣṭhatī śāśvatasya /
Sa kumbhe retas sarje surāṇām /
Yatrotpannam ṛṣim āhur Vasiṣṭham //

Kṛṣṇa, here, is to be understood, of course, in the sense of the All-powerful God, whose incarnation Kṛṣṇa was believed to be,

this world.²⁵⁰ Vasiṣṭha was highly regarded as the best of Brāhmaṇas (viprāṇaṃ śreṣṭhaḥ),²⁵¹ so much so that Indra once went in the guise of Vasiṣṭha to test the will of Śrutāvati daughter of Bharadvāja.²⁵² Śrutāvati was doing penance with the object of marrying Indra only. When the guest (Indra disguised as Vasiṣṭha) arrived, she welcomed him according to the rules laid down and humbly offered any service except her hand which was to clasp Indra's only.²⁵³ The revered guest then gave five jujube fruits (badara), asking her to prepare a meal out of them and went away. When she set herself to the task, they would not bake at all. The fuel was exhausted, but she put her legs into the hearth as fuel, without a tremor and without a sigh. The God was pleased and took her to heaven. That holy spot is called Badarapācana.²⁵⁴

Vasiṣṭha and Arundhatī are objects of adoration and example to society. Kuntī blesses Draupadī that she may be to her husbands as Arundhatī to Vasiṣṭha, as Bhadrā to Vaiśravaṇa and as Lakṣmī to Nārāyaṇa etc.²⁵⁵ Śāntā, daughter of Lomapāda, attended upon Ṛṣyaśṛṅga as devotedly as Arundhatī upon Vasiṣṭha,²⁵⁶ as Lopāmudrā upon Agastya etc. When the world is beset with calamity the revered dame Arundhatī supersedes Vasiṣṭha!²⁵⁷ But Arundhatī's virtue is unimpeachable as is evidenced by the story of Agni's love for the wives of the Seven Sages. Svāhā, in winning the love of Agni, could not impersonate Arundhatī, because of her spotless character as a pativrātā, while she successfully impersonated the other six and bore the great War-god, Kumāra.²⁵⁸ Finally Bhīṣma relates how Arundhatī preached righteousness (dharma) to the Sages, the manes and the gods,²⁵⁹ concentrating upon the efficacy of gifts and of the worship of the cow. Brahmā extolled her for such salutary counsel and wished greater and greater

250. Ibid. V 108.13. Atrā pūrvam Vasiṣṭhasya paurāṇasya dvijarabha / Sūtiś caiva pratiṣṭhā ca nidhanam ca prakāśate // Vasiṣṭha's demise came about in the form of giving up the mortal body on account of Nimi's curse: see com. Context—Supraṇa describing the importance of each of the four quarters to Gālava.

251. Ibid. VII 6.6., XII 122.31 etc.

252. Ibid., IX 48.

253. "Śakrabhaktiā ca te pāṇim na dāsyāmi kathāncana" //

Ibid. IX 48.9.

254. "Idam ca te tirthavaram sthīram loke bhaviṣyati /

Sarvapāpāpaham subhru nāmnā Badarapācanam //

Ibid. st. 32.

255. "Yathā Vaiśravaṇe Bhadrā Vasiṣṭhe cāpyarundhatī /

Yathā Nārāyaṇe Lakṣmī tathā tvam bhava bhartṛṣu //

Mbh. I 199.6.

256. III 113.23 "Arundhatīva subhagā Vasiṣṭham Lopāmudrā vā yathā hyagastyam!" Cf. also V 117.17—Dīvodāsa sported with MādHAVI as Adṛśyanti with Vasiṣṭha, and Akṣamālā with Vasiṣṭha (Vasiṣṭhaś cākṣamālayā)—Gālavarita.

257. "Yā caisā viśrutā rājāṃs trilokyē sādhūsammatā / Arundhatī tayāpyeṣa Vasiṣṭhaḥ prṣṭhataḥ kṛtaḥ // VI 2.31. This of course refers to the stellar movements; the one referred to here is an ill omen foreboding calamity, as observed by Bhīṣma before Dhṛtarāṣṭra on the eve of the Great War. Figuratively too, it is meant to suggest an upheaval in society when such a dutiful wife should disregard a saintly husband.

258. Mbh. III 226.

259. XIII 130.1-12 et seq.

glory for her austerities. On several occasions Vasiṣṭha himself is engaged in philosophic discussions with Brahmā on the one side²⁶⁰ and with Karāla-Janaka on the other; taught higher knowledge to Nārada.²⁶¹ Hiranyakṣipu was cursed by Vasiṣṭha son of Hiranyagabha because he elected a different Hotṛ priest, whereby he even before the sacrifice ended, met his own end at the hands of a very strange being.²⁶²

Having thus surveyed the individual life story of Vasiṣṭha and Viśvāmitra as depicted in the Mahābhārata, we may now examine the story of their age-long hostility. The Mbh. tradition, of course, takes the rivalry or even hatred between the sages as an established fact. But as they have been counted within the group of the most eminent sages, the Saptarṣis, it is also undeniable that the question of their hatred had long before been shelved. It no doubt endured in popular tradition only to do credit to both sages, the one as an embodiment of saintly excellence, the other an embodiment of the highest realisation through action (puruṣakāra). The one was born divine and the other, by tapas, attained divinity. We may now recapitulate their mutual hostility as related in the Mbh.

The Gandharva relates the story to Arjuna.²⁶³ This old story (purāṇa) of Vasiṣṭha they tell in all worlds. In Kānyakubja, king Gādhi, son of Kuśika, had a son Viśvāmitra, who, with his ministers used to go a-hunting. Once he arrived at the hermitage of Vasiṣṭha, who offered him arghya etc. from his cow Nandinī, who yielded everything desired; Viśvāmitra asked Vasiṣṭha to give him Nandinī for an arbuda of kine or his kingdom but in vain. Then he wanted to take the cow by force. She repaired to Vasiṣṭha, who at first did nothing saying²⁶⁴ "I am a forgiving brāhman," but at last he said, "I do not abandon you! Stay if you can!"²⁶⁵ Hearing this word, the cow attacked Viśvāmitra's troops. From her tail she began to rain showers of burning coals, from her tail she brought forth Pahlavas, from her udders Drāviḍas and Śakas, from her vitals Yavanas, from her dung Śabaras, from her urine and from her sides several other Śabaras, and from the froth of her mouth Paundras, Kirātas, Yavanas, Simhalas, Barbaras, Khasas, Cibukas, Pulindas, Ciṇas, Hūnas, Keralas and other Mlecchas, who attacked Viśvāmitra's soldiers. Viśvāmitra's troops fled, but none was deprived of life. Viśvāmitra then, disgusted with Kṣatriya prowess,²⁶⁶ set his mind on asceticism and finally became a brahman and drank soma with Indra.

260. XIII 6.

261. XII 302-309 chs.

262. Mbh. XII 342.31 (Nārāyaṇa), the strange Being being the Man-Lion incarnation of God Nārāyaṇa.

263. Ibid I 175.

264. Kṣatriyāṇām balam tejo brāhmaṇāṇām kṣamā balam / St. 29.

265. Na tvām tyajāmi kalyāṇi sthityatām yadi śakyate / St. 31.

266. "Dhiḥ balam Kṣatriya-balam brahmatejobalam balam" St. 45.

Viśvāmitra's hatred is said to have manifested itself in another incident which appears to have some Vedic authority.²⁶⁷ King Kalmāṣapāda Saudāsa of the Ikṣvāku race was cursed by Vasiṣṭha's son Śakti to become a cannibal and, unfortunately Śakti himself became the first victim. Viśvāmitra was an accomplice²⁶⁸ in this dastardly act inasmuch as he directed a fiend called Kiṅkara to possess king Kalmāṣapāda. That gave him the required monstrosity to eat human beings. Vasiṣṭha was filled with sorrow at this bereavement; but he patiently bore his grief and resolved rather to sacrifice his own life than exterminate the Kuśikas. He threw himself down from the summit of Meru, entered a huge fire in the forest, and tied a heavy weight to his neck and threw himself into the sea, but all in vain, and, in distress of heart, he returned to his hermitage. Beholding it bereft of his children, he left it again and tied himself strongly with cords and flung himself into a mighty river, but the stream cut those cords and cast the ṛṣi ashore whence that river was called Vipāśā. Once more he threw himself into a river flowing from Himavat (Haimavati) but the river immediately fled in 100 different directions and has since been known by the name of Śatadru.²⁶⁹ He now again went towards his hermitage,²⁷⁰ and was, on the way, addressed by Adṛśyanti, the wife of Śakti, who had for twelve years borne his child in her womb. Hearing that child in the womb reciting the Vedas with the six aṅgas, Vasiṣṭha refrained from self-destruction²⁷¹ and, accompanied by Adṛśyanti returned to his hermitage. One day he saw Kalmāṣapāda, who would devour him. Adṛśyanti was terrified, but Vasiṣṭha restrained him by uttering "hum," and, sprinkling him with water sanctified by mantras, freed him from his curse that had lasted twelve years. Kalmāṣapāda promised never more to insult Brāhmins and prevailed upon Vasiṣṭha that he accompanied him to his capital Ayodhyā and begot a son for him on the queen. Then he went back to his hermitage. After twelve years the queen tore open her womb by a stone, and then was born the Rājaraṣi Āsmaka, who founded the city of Paudanya.²⁷²

Arjuna asked: why did Kalmāṣapāda command his queen to go to Vasiṣṭha? And was this an act of sin on Vasiṣṭha's part? The Gandharva replied:²⁷³ Under the influence of the curse, Kalmāṣapāda, in anger, went out of his capital, accompanied by his wife. In a solitary part of the woods he saw a Brāhmin and his wife embracing each other. The couple ran away, but Kalmāṣapāda forcibly 267. The Vedic version is that Śakti was thrown into fire by the Saudāsas. Vide BD VI 28,34, also Sarvā (p. 25) on RV VII 32.

268. "Viśvāmitras tato rakṣa ādideśa nṛpam prati /
Śāpāt tasya tu vipraṇṣer Viśvāmitrasya cājñayā /
Rākṣasaḥ Kiṅkaro nāma viveśa nṛpatim tadā //"

Mbh. I 176.20-21.

269. "Śatadhā vidrutā yasmāc chatadrur iti viśrutā" Ib. I 177.9.

270. "Mārtum na śakyam ityuktṛvā punarevāśramam yayan" / St. 10.

271. "Evam uktas tayā hr̥ṣṭo Vasiṣṭhaḥ śreṣṭhabhāg ṛṣih /
Asti santānam ityuktṛvā mṛtyoḥ pārtha nyavartata // St. 16.

272. Mbh. I 177.

273. Ibid. I 182.

seized the Brāhmaṇ. The Brāhmaṇī asked him to liberate her husband, but he cruelly devoured him. The tears that the woman shed blazed up like fire and consumed everything in that place. The Brāhmaṇī cursed the rājarṣi saying that he should meet with instant death when cohabiting with his wife and that his wife should have a son from Vasiṣṭha whose children he had devoured, and that child should be the propagator of his race. Then she entered the fire. Vasiṣṭha by his ascetic power immediately knew all about it. And long after this, when the Rājarṣi became freed from his curse, he approached his wife Madayanti, not remembering the curse of the Brāhmaṇī. Hearing, however, the words of his wife, he recollected the curse and therefore, he appointed Vasiṣṭha to beget a son on his queen.

Viśvāmitra's first encounter with Vasiṣṭha is somewhat differently related in another context. While describing Balarāma's pilgrimage in Śalya-parva, Vaiśampāyana relates to Janamejaya the story of how certain kings attained Brāhmaṇhood, and among them Viśvāmitra.²⁷⁴ The great Kṣatriya Gādhi Kauśika became an ascetic, having resolved to give up his body, he installed his son Viśvāmitra on the throne, notwithstanding the solicitations of his subjects, and went to heaven. Viśvāmitra however could not protect the earth even with his best exertions.²⁷⁵ He then heard of a great fear of the Rākṣasas, and went out with his army. In the hermitage of Vasiṣṭha, his troops caused much mischief; when Vasiṣṭha came to the hermitage he became angry and commanded his cow to create many terrible Śabaras, who, encountering the army of Viśvāmitra caused great carnage and the troops fled away. Viśvāmitra then set his heart on ascetic austerities, and in the tīrtha of the Sarasvatī, he began to emaciate his own body,²⁷⁶ although the gods repeatedly attempted to interrupt him. Brahmā granted him the boon that he should become a brāhmaṇ. Then he wandered over the whole earth like a celestial.²⁷⁷

Viśvāmitra's hatred of Vasiṣṭha appears to have been of an uncompromising and unrelenting kind as the former wished to kill the latter by any means.²⁷⁸ The hermitage of Vasiṣṭha was in Sthāṇutīrtha on the bank of the Sarasvatī; on the opposite bank was the hermitage of Viśvāmitra. There Sthāṇu had practised penances, and having performed a sacrifice and worshipped the Sarasvatī, he had established a tīrtha and there the gods of yore installed Skanda. Viśvāmitra and Vasiṣṭha everyday challenged each other in respect of the superiority of their penances. Viśvāmitra ordered the Sarasvatī, notwithstanding her trembling, to bring Vasiṣṭha into his presence, that he might slay him. Vasiṣṭha willingly let

274. IX 40.11-29.

275. "Na sa śaknoti prthivīm yatnavān api rakṣitum" / St.17.

276. "Jalābhāro vāyubhākṣaḥ parṇābhāras ca so'bhavat /
Tathā sthāṇḍilāśāyī ca ye cānye niyamāḥ prthak /
Asakṛt tasya devās tu vratavighnam praekṛire" / Sts. 24-5.

277. "Sa labdhivā tapasogreṇa brāhmaṇatvam mahāyaśāḥ /
Vinecām mahīm kṛtsnām kṛtakāmas suropamaḥ" / St.29.

278. Mbh. IX 42 and 43 (chs.).

her do so, lest Viśvāmītra should curse her. Sartasvatī washed away one of her banks and bore Vasiṣṭha away and informed Viśvāmītra about his arrival; but while the latter was looking for a weapon she quickly washed Vasiṣṭha back to the Eastern bank. Viśvāmītra cursed her, saying that her current should be changed into blood which is acceptable only to the Rākṣasas. For a whole year she then flowed bearing blood mixed with water. The gods, the Gandharvas, and the Apsarasas grieved. For this reason the tīrtha came to be Vasiṣṭhāpavāha.

Sarasvatī, however, once more got back her own proper condition when some sages on a pilgrimage to the holy river, having bathed in all her tīrthas, came to Vasiṣṭhāpavāha, and saw the water mixed with blood, innumerable Rākṣasas drinking it. Having learnt the cause, they worshipped Mahādeva with penances and purified the Sarasvatī.²⁷⁹ The Rākṣasas, who were Brahma-Rākṣasas (so those among Vaiśyas, Śūdras and Kṣatriyas who hate and injure the brāhmins, become Rākṣasas), afflicted with hunger, sought the protection of the sages who, having ordained what should be the food of the Rākṣasas, solicited the Sarasvatī, who assumed a new shape called Aruṇā (Red River); bathing in that new river, the Rākṣasas abandoned their bodies and went to heaven. Ascertaining all this, Indra bathed there and became purified of a grievous sin (Brahmahatyā).²⁸⁰

Before taking a retrospect of the history of the two sages and their mutual relationship, we may take note of a partial summary of Viśvāmītra's deeds, given in connection with the Śakuntalopākhyāna. Śakuntalā relates her parentage to Duṣyanta as once given out by sage Kaṇva to another sage who came as a guest. Viśvāmītra deprived Vasiṣṭha of his children. Though born as a Kṣatriya he became a brahman through his penances, and created the river Kauśiki for his ablutions. There his wife, during a famine, was maintained by the rājarṣi Mataṅga who was living as a hunter. Therefore when the famine was over, Viśvāmītra changed the name of the river into Pārā and performed a sacrifice for Mataṅga and Indra himself, from fear, came there to drink soma. Viśvāmītra in anger, created another world and a series of nakṣatras, beginning with Pratiśravaṇa and gave protection to Triśaṅku, who was cursed by his preceptor. He could burn the three worlds by his splendour, and by a kick cause the earth to shake. He could sever Meru and hurl it away at any distance. He could round the Earth, in a moment and Yama, Soma, the Maharṣis, the Sādhyas, the Viśvas and the Vālakhilyas are afraid of his prowess.²⁸¹

279. Te sarve brāhmaṇā rājāṁś tapobhīr nīyamais tathā /
Upavāsaiś ca vivīdhaiṛ yamaiḥ kaṣṭhavratais tathā /
Ārādhya paśu-bhūtarām mahādevam jagatpatim /
Mokṣayāmāsus tām devīm sarīreḥreṣṭhām Sarasvatīm /
(IX 43.14-15).

280. Arising out of the slaying of Namuci. Ibid. Sts. 33-43.

281. Mbh. I 71.29-39. The confusion in the sequence of events in this narrative is undoubted, Apsaras Menakā is pleading before Indra as to how, forsooth, could she tackle a sage of such prowess and anger. Elsewhere (in the Rām. for instance) it is represented that the Menakā episode was a stage in the sage's elevation to Brāhmanhood; possibly so, because the Bramharṣi is free from excitement, anger and passion; and Menakā provided a test. Secondly, are Mataṅga and Triśaṅku different or identical? The tenor of this passage points to their being different

From the numerous references to Vasiṣṭha and Viśvāmitra in the Great Epics, Rāmāyaṇa and the Mahābhārata, it is reasonable to deduce as follows :

(a) Vasiṣṭha and Viśvāmitra had a long life of activity before they were elevated to be among the chosen Seven i.e. the Saptarṣis.

(b) Vasiṣṭha was born great, all saintliness and virtue were natural to him, he was the embodiment of patience, of the quality of Sattva. His passive resistance when attacked by the enemy appears exemplary. His attempt at self-immolation in his bereavement is somewhat strange and savours of being too commonplace. His eminence, however, as saint and priest of kings (purohita) is undoubted.

(c) Viśvāmitra achieved greatness. Son of a king, he perfected himself in the qualities and attainments of a rājanya ; an embodiment of the quality of Rajas, he was. But seeing that the quality of Sattva had more enduring features, determined to acquire it. The chief thing was to conquer passion and anger ; this he did achieve by penance, by patient but steadfast endeavour (puruṣakāra).

(d) The Vasiṣṭha-Viśvāmitra feud reveals itself as a thing of the ancient past even in the age of the Mbh. Tradition, at any rate, believed that the two sages were once upon a time enemies of each other. The events connected therewith were remembered not because it was a quarrel between two great personalities but because it would serve as a beacon light of righteousness on the one hand and effective human endeavour on the other.

(e) Popular tradition betrays no partiality to either of them, one, for instance, of the nature suggested by the expression " Vasiṣṭha-dveṣiṇyaḥ," which is applied to a few verses in the Viśvāmitra-maṇḍala, said to be imprecations against the Vasiṣṭhas ; whereas no imprecation in the Vasiṣṭha-maṇḍala is ever regarded as despising the Viśvāmitras. The Mbh. age conceives the sages as equally respectable ; there was no question of their relative superiority. On the other hand, a word should be said to the credit of the self-made saint Viśvāmitra, who, by dint of his achievement, had inspired the people with a reverential awe. The world was amazed at his powers of making or unmaking it. It was not much wonder that he could as well be one of the four founders of Brāhman tribes as it were and hence an inspirer of a tradition by itself ; a veritable saṃpradāya-pravartaka.

HARIVAMŚA

One incident connected with Vasiṣṭha and Viśvāmitra is pointedly dealt with in the Harivamśa, that is about Satyavrata.²⁸² He was the son of king Trayyāruṇa persons, though they are possibly identical with one another, as is stated in another context. (Vide VP Wilson vol. III pp. 284 ff. as referred to in his MOST I, p. 375 f. See VP text IV 3.13, compare also Hari. 12 and 13, where Vasiṣṭha is also introduced). The anomalies in the narrative of Viśvāmitra's deeds, as shown above, may be of no serious consequence when we remember that the narrator was Śakuntalā, who in her unsophisticated innocence recalled the events of a bygone age just as they occurred to her mind. They have no chronological value.

282. Hari. chs. 12 and 13.

who had Vasiṣṭha for his priest. Once Satyavrata carried away a bride who had been betrothed to another. King Trayyārūṇa abandoned the son on this account whereupon the latter lived among the low caste people in a degraded condition. The old king went to the forest, for penance. Vasiṣṭha himself managed the affairs of State. A twelve year draught then set in as result of adharma for which Satyavrata was responsible. The latter, however, nourished a sense of anger against Vasiṣṭha because he did not exert his influence to dissuade the king from the drastic punishment which was inflicted on the Prince. At this time, Viśvāmitra had left his family and children there and gone to the shores of the ocean for penance. When the famine set in, the family was reduced to severe straits. Viśvāmitra's wife was about to sell away her middle son (Gālava) for a hundred cows in order to sustain the rest. Meanwhile Satyavrata intervened and liberated the boy, and, until Viśvāmitra returned from penance, provided them with venison and pork which he (every day) tied to a tree near their residence. To Vasiṣṭha, however, he never reconciled himself; and once when he could not procure food anywhere, he happened to see Vasiṣṭha's all-bestowing cow which he at once killed and fed himself and Viśvāmitra's family. Vasiṣṭha got angry and denounced the offender as Triśaṅku, one who has committed three sins, viz. causing displeasure to the father, killing the preceptor's cow and eating unsprinkled food.²⁸³ Now Viśvāmitra returned from austerities and was much pleased with Satyavrata for the support he gave for his family in his absence. Asked to elect a favour in return, the outcast Prince prayed that he might be enabled to ascend Heaven bodily. The famine having abated, Viśvāmitra reinstated him on the throne and sacrificed for him so that, as all gods and even Vasiṣṭha could see, sent Triśaṅku bodily to Heaven. The famous Hariścandra was the son of this King Satyavarta Triśaṅku.²⁸⁴

Viśvāmitra's lineage, the adoption of Śunaśśepa Devarāta into his family with all rights of primogeniture, and the ever-baffling host of sons and families that emanated from him have been accounted in the Harivaṁśa.²⁸⁵ These have been fully discussed in the foregoing chapters in various contexts. So far as genealogies go, the accounts in the Hari. add to the confusion. Śunaśśepa is the middle son with Jamadagni for his elder brother and Śunaḥpucchā for the younger!²⁸⁶ Viśvāmitra's original name was Viśvaratha,²⁸⁷ not the only son of Gādhi, he had brothers as well, Viśvakṛt, and Viśvajit, and a sister Satyavati, 283. aprokṣitopayogāt asamskr̥tamāmsabhakṣaṇāt Ib. XIII 18.

284. Hari. XIII 18-19.

Pitṛś cāparitoṣeṇa guror dogdhrivadhena ca /
Aprokṣitopayogāc ca trivīdhyas te vyatikramah /
Evam trīṇyasya śaṅkūni tāni dṛṣṭvā mahātāpāḥ /
Triśaṅkur iti hovāca Triśaṅkur iti sa smṛtaḥ //

285. Ibid. XXVII

286. Ibid. Sts. 41-42.

287. Viśvāmitras tu dharmātmā nāmnā Viśvarathas smṛtaḥ /
Jajñe Bhṛguprasādēna Kauśikād Vamśavardhanaḥ // St. 44.

youngest of them all.²⁸⁸ One is tempted to think that all the three names Viśvaratha, Viśvakṛt and Viśvajit are only epithets²⁸⁹ of Viśvāmitra who possessed all the qualities connoted by those names: the course of his chariot extended over all the three worlds; he was world-maker (anyam Indram kariṣyāmi etc.) and world-conqueror.

VII

PURĀNAS

Vasiṣṭha and Viśvāmitra are familiar personalities in the entire range of Purāṇic literature. Both sages were revered. Vasiṣṭha was regarded as one of the mind-born sons of Brahmā.²⁹⁰ He and Viśvāmitra are both counted among the seven holy sages (Saptarṣis) of the Vaivasvata-manvantara.²⁹¹ Between them, they have rendered so many places on the banks of the Sarasvatī and Gaṅgā holy on account of one or other of their great achievements. Quite new incidents have been recorded about them, as we shall see presently. Their rivalry or hostility is a thing of the past, not endangering the reputation of either, of course. Nevertheless the several incidents which mark their mutual jealousy and hatred are narrated with ever-changing colours.

While Vasiṣṭha was described as a mind-born son of the Creator, we see a second birth become necessary for him on account of the curse of Nimi! The story is thus told in the Viṣṇu-Purāṇa: The son of Ikṣvāku, who was named Nimi, instituted a sacrifice that was to endure for a thousand years, and applied to Vasiṣṭha to offer the oblations. Vasiṣṭha in answer said that he had been

288. Viśvāmitras tu Gādheyo rājā Viśvarathas tadā / Viśvakṛd Viśvajecceiva tathā Satyavatiṃ nṛpa / Ib. XXXII 51-3.
—Satyavati Viśvāmitrādīnām Kṛtyast (eom.)

289. Pargiter thinks that Viśvaratha was his original name. That is how it looks from XXVII 44. But seeing that coupled with two more names in XXXII 51-52, it is better to conceive all as epithets. The name Viśvāmitra itself appears to be an acquired name. His real name appears to be unknown.

290. See, for instance, Brahma I 43.4, Viṣṇu I 7.5, Brahmāṇḍa II 11, Matsya 3.6-7, Bhāgavata III 12.22-24, Vāyu 25.82, etc. The number of these mānasa-putras ranges from 7 to 10. Vasiṣṭha married Ūrjā (Energy), one of the 24 daughters of Patriarch Dakṣa, and had seven sons by her, namely, Haṅas, Gātra, Ūrdhvaabāhu, Savana, Anagha, Sutapas and Śukra. (Viṣṇu I 10.13 f). The famous Śakti and other sons are from a different marriage evidently—Akṣamālā or Arundhātī.

291. The Seven Sages are supposed to be different in each Manvantara. For instance in the third i.e. Auttami Manvantara. (Vide Viṣṇu III 1.15) the seven sons of Vasiṣṭha were the seven Ṛsis. Strange, however, that the father is one of the seven sages only in a later i.e. the seventh Manvantara (Vaivasvata). It must be a descendant of the progenitor of the Vasiṣṭha family. Incidentally, it may be noted, that the entire cosmogony changes from Manvantara to Manvantara. Different is Indra, different are the classes of gods, the divine sages etc. This fanciful picture is ably satirised by Nilakaṇṭha Dīkṣita in his Campū, the Nilakaṇṭha-Vijaya. In the outer chamber of Brahma's Palace, a number of Potentates are waiting for an interview with the Highest one. Indra went up to the door, the Lord-in-Waiting asks: "Indra of what Age are you?" (Katamaḥ Purandaraḥ)! The accounts in the Purāṇas and the Upapurāṇas pertaining to the creation are by no means consistent. They baffle all attempts at a clear delineation. One may however benefit from a perusal of the notes provided by H. H. Wilson in his translation of the Viṣṇu Purāṇa Books I to III.

pre-engaged by Indra for five hundred years, but if the king would wait for some time, he would come and officiate as superintending priest. The king made no answer, and Vasiṣṭha went away supposing that he had assented. When the sage had completed the performance of the ceremonies he had conducted for Indra, he returned with all speed to Nimi, purposing to render him the like office. When he arrived, however, and found that Nimi had retained Gautama and other priests to minister at his sacrifice, he was much displeased and pronounced upon the king, who was then asleep, a curse to the effect that since he had not intimated his intention, but transferred to Gautama the duty he had first entrusted to himself, Vasiṣṭha, Nimi should thenceforth cease to exist in corporeal form. When Nimi woke up and knew what had happened, he in return denounced as an imprecation upon his unjust preceptor, that he also should lose his bodily existence as punishment for uttering a curse upon him before communicating with him. Nimi then abandoned his bodily condition. The spirit of Vasiṣṭha also leaving his body was united with the spirits of Mitra and Varuṇa for a season until, through their passion for the celestial nymph Urvaśī the sage was reborn. The corpse of Nimi was preserved from decay by being embalmed with fragrant oils and resins. When the sacrifice was concluded, the gods who had come to receive their portions were willing to restore him to bodily life, but Nimi declined to resume a corporeal shape. He wished, however, to dwell in the eyes of all beings. To this desire, the gods assented and Nimi was placed by them in the eyes of all living creatures, in consequence of which their eyelids are ever opening and closing.²⁹²

Vasiṣṭha was responsible for the banishment of Vikukṣi by his father Ikṣvāku. Upon one of the days called Aṣṭakā, Ikṣvāku being desirous of celebrating ancestral obsequies, ordered Vikukṣi, to bring him flesh suitable for the offering. The prince accordingly went into the forest and killed many deer, and other wild animals for the ceremony. Being weary with the chase and being hungry, he sat down and ate a hare; after which, being refreshed, he carried the rest of the game to his father. Vasiṣṭha the family priest of the House of Ikṣvāku was summoned to consecrate the food, but he declared that it was impure, in consequence of Vikukṣi having eaten a hare from amongst it (making it thus, as it were, the remnant of his meal). Vikukṣi was in consequence abandoned by his offended father and the epithet Śasāda (hare-eater) was given to him being so described by the preceptor.²⁹³

Turning to Viśvāmitra, we find that his descent is traced to Jahnu, who in turn was descended from Amāvasu son of Aila. Viśvāmitra is the son of Gādhī and grandson of Kuśika according to Brahma-purāṇa, of Kuśāmba according to 292. Viṣṇu IV 1-9 (sections in prose style). Vide also: Matsya 61.32-6, 201.1-17, Padma V 22.34-37, Vāyu 89.4; Brahmanḍa III 64.4, Bhāgavata IX 13.1-6, Rām. VII 55.56,57. According to Pargiter, there were two kings of the name, one of Videha and another of Vidarbha; Nimi is also a ṛṣi belonging to the Ātreyas. Nimi of the episode in question must be of Videha (Vi-deha = bodiless) as the name itself suggests. (AIHT: consult the Index). Slight variations may be perceived in the different Purāṇas cited above. cf. AIHT p. 215.

293. Viṣṇu IV 2.5-7, cf. also Vāyu 88.11-19, Brahma 7.48-51, Brahmanḍa III 63.11-20. Bull DCRI xi-21.

Viṣṇu-Purāṇa.²⁹⁴ These are minor differences ; one thing is certain, Viśvāmitra, at all events, was born in a line of kings but became a Brahmarṣi by resolve. His association with the Śunaśśeṇa legend, as told in the Purāṇas, has been fully discussed in the previous chapter.

The incident of having to eat dog's flesh for want of better food during a twelve-year famine was the occasion for a discourse between Viśvāmitra and a Cāṇḍāla from whose house, the sage was about to make away with "dog's leg" (śva-jāghaṇī), on the right or wrong of such an action. Ultimately Indra opened his eyes and showered rain to end the famine. The Brahma purāṇa describes this story more picturesquely.²⁹⁵ Once there occurred a terrible draught, there was nowhere food available. Viśvāmitra repaired to the holy river Gautamī. Seeing his wife, children and disciples emaciated with hunger, the sage ordered the pupils to hunt up something to eat without delay. They roamed about and brought a dead dog which was all they could find. Viśvāmitra said : " Very well, cut it up, wash and roast it ; we shall, according to rule, propitiate the gods, sages, and the manes and then partake of the remainder." The pupils obeyed. Agni came, the gods' messenger, was astonished to see the offering and told the gods that they have to eat dog's flesh which the sage in distress has offered. To prevent such a base offering, Indra came as an eagle and carried away the vessel which contained the flesh. The sage was wrath when the pupils reported this and was about to curse when Indra transformed the contents into honey and replaced the vessel. But Viśvāmitra demanded the dog's flesh itself on pain of being reduced to ashes. Afraid of consequences, Indra came up and said, " why bother about the inedible dog's flesh, pour the honey-oblation and drink the rest in the company of your children." Viśvāmitra replied, ' what use with one such meal ? All people are suffering, then what is the good of this honey ? If it should become nectar for all, then only I would have it pure, otherwise, gods and manes shall eat this flesh of the dog. And then I shall also eat it, to be sure.'²⁹⁶ Realising the danger, Indra immediately summoned the clouds and showered nectar-like rain on earth. There was joy everywhere. Thenceforth that place on the Gautamī became famous as Viśvāmitra-tīrtha.

294. Brahma 10.11-68, Viṣṇu IV 7.1-16, Vāyu 91.49-103, reads Kuśāśva for Kuśika, Brahmaṇḍa III 66.23-69.

295. Brahma 93.4-24. cf. Mbh. XII 141. supra p.

296. Viśvāmitro'pi netyāha bhuktenaikena kim phalam /
Prajās sarvās ca śīdanti kim tena madhunā hare /
Sarveśam amṛtam cetsyāt bhokṣye'ham amṛtam śuci /
Athavā devapitaro bhokṣyanti dam śvamāmsakam /
Paścād aham tacea māmsam bhokṣye nāṇṛtam asti me /
Tato bhūtas Sahasrākṣo meghānāhūya tatksaṇāt /
Vavarṣa cāmṛtam vāri hyamṛtenārpitāḥ prajāḥ //

Ibid. sts. 20-23.

There is no doubt that the outline of the story given in the Mbh. is here expanded and embellished so as to make it attractive to those for whom the literature was meant. That these sages with all their divine powers had to suffer earthly ills as hunger and thirst is hard to reconcile.

Now remain the legend of Kalmāṣapāda and that of Satyavrata Triśaṅku, both of which remind the world of the ancient feud between Vasiṣṭha and Viśvā-mitra. The Viṣṇu-purāṇa narrates the first story as follows : Mitrasaha, son of Sudāsa of Ayodhyā once celebrated a sacrifice which was conducted by Vasiṣṭha. At the close of the rite, Vasiṣṭha went out. At that time a Rākṣasa assumed the semblance of Vasiṣṭha and came and said to the king : " Now that the sacrifice is ended, you must give me flesh to eat ; let it be cooked and I, will presently return." Having said this, he withdrew, and, transforming himself into the shape of the cook, dressed some human flesh, which he brought to the king, who, receiving it on a plate of gold, awaited the reappearance of Vasiṣṭha. As soon as the sage returned, the king offered him the dish. Vasiṣṭha, surprised at such want of propriety in the king, as his offering him meat to eat, considered what it should be that was so presented and by the efficacy of his meditations discovered that it was human flesh. He grew angry and denounced a curse upon the king saying : " Inasmuch as you have insulted all such holy men as we are, by giving me what is not to be eaten, your appetite shall henceforth be excited by similar food.

" It was yourself," replied the king to the indignant sage, " who commanded this food to be prepared." " By me !" exclaimed Vasiṣṭha, " how could that have been ?" and, again, having recourse to meditation, he detected the whole truth. Foregoing then all displeasure towards the king, he said : " The food to which I have sentenced you shall not be your sustenance for ever, it shall only be so for twelve years." The king who had taken up water in the palm of his hand and was prepared to curse the sage, now considered that Vasiṣṭha was his spiritual guide, and being reminded by Madayanti his queen that it ill became him to denounce an imprecation upon a holy teacher, who was the guardian divinity of his race, abandoned his intention. Unwilling to cast the water upon the earth, lest it should wither up the grain, for it was impregnated with his malediction, and equally reluctant to throw it up into the air lest it should blast the clouds and dry up their contents, he threw it down upon his own feet. Scalded by the heat which the water had derived from his angry imprecation, the feet of the king became spotted black and white, and he thence obtained the name of Kalmāṣapāda or he with the spotted feet.

In consequence of the curse of Vasiṣṭha, the king became a cannibal every sixth watch of the day for twelve years, and in that state wandered through the forests, and devoured multitudes of men. One occasion, he beheld a holy person engaged in sport with his wife. As soon as they saw his terrific form, they were frightened and endeavoured to escape. But the royal cannibal overtook and seized the husband. The wife then also desisted from flight, and earnestly entreated the savage to spare her lord exclaiming, " Thou, Mitrasaha, art the pride of the royal House of Ikṣvāku, not a malignant fiend ! It is not in thy nature, who knowest the characters of women, to carry off and devour my husband." But all was in vain, and, regardless of her repeated supplications, he ate the Brahman, as a tiger devours the deer. Furious with wrath, the Brāhman's wife addressed the king and said, "Since you have barbarously disturbed the joys of a wedded pair and killed my husband, your death shall be the consequence of your associating with your queen." So saying, she entered the flames.

At the expiration of the period of his curse, Saudāsa returned home. Being reminded of the curse of the Brāhmaṇi by his wife Madayanti, he abstained from conjugal intercourse and was therefore childless. But having solicited the interposition of Vasiṣṭha, Madayanti became pregnant. The child however was not born for seven years, when the queen, becoming impatient, divided the womb with a sharp stone and was thereby delivered. The child was thence called Āsmaka.²⁹⁷

The above account is corroborated by the Bhāgavata.²⁹⁸ As it is, it shows no interference on the part of Viśvāmitra in the affair of Vasiṣṭha and Kalmāṣapāda. The Mbh. supplies the link viz. that the Rākṣasa, who played the mischief by impersonating Vasiṣṭha for the moment, was employed by Viśvāmitra.²⁹⁹ This was specially so when, according to Mbh., the king was cursed by Śakti son of Vasiṣṭha. Nevertheless, some disagreements among the several authorities must be acknowledged with regard to this story. According to the Brhaddevatā, at a great sacrifice by Sudās, Viśvāmitra was overcome by Śakti. Consequently Viśvāmitra sank down unconscious. But to him the Jamadagnis gave speech called Sasarpārī, having brought her from the dwelling of the Sun. That speech dispelled the Kuśikas' loss of intelligence (a-mātim).³⁰⁰ The Sarvānukramaṇī, introducing RV VII 32, says that Śakti, thrown to the fire by the Saudāsas, composed the last pragāthā, but before he finished, he was consumed; Vasiṣṭha completed it.³⁰¹ The Brhaddevatā, again, points out that Vasiṣṭha's hundred sons were killed by the Saudāsas or by Sudāsa who in consequence of a curse had been transformed into a Rākṣas.³⁰² Now it is this story that is found elaborated in the Mbh. The other two stories are not traced in the Purāṇas.³⁰³

The Mahābhārata relates the conflict³⁰⁴ between Śakti and Kalmāṣapāda for precedence of giving way in the road,³⁰⁵ the king beat him with a whip whereupon Śakti cursed him to become a cannibal. At this stage it is reported that Viśvāmitra

297. Viṣṇu IV 4.19-38.

298. Bhāgavata IX 9.18-39. Vide also Rām. VII 65 and Brhannāradiya IX 3-151.

299. Mbh. I 176, see infra.

300. BD IV 112-114. Sasarpārī is called Sūryasya duhitā in RV III 53.15. "Sasarpārī sarvatra gadyapadyātmakatvena sarpapaṣilā vāgdevatā"—Sāyaṇa. BD hereby suggests that the other Kuśikas, as well as Viśvāmitra, had been rendered unconscious by Śakti. cf. Śiṣya on Sarvā. p. 107.

301. Sarvā. p. 25 and Śiṣya thereon, p. 130 f.

302. BD VI 28 and 33-34. "Such is the sacred tradition," (iti vai Śrutih). Note that the 100 sons are meant here whereas Śakti's death is not specified.

303. AIHT p. 208, n.5. The two stories are Śakti overcoming Viśvāmitra and his being thrown into the fire by the followers of Sudās.

304. Vide Mbh. I 176, 177 and 182.

305. "Mama panthā mahārāja dharma eṣa sanātanaḥ /
Rājā sarveṣu dharmeṣu deyaḥ panthā dvijātaye //
Ibid. 176.8.

who watched the incident, himself remaining invisible, directed a Rākṣasa to possess the king.³⁰⁶ Denounced by the curse, Kalmāṣapāda happened to offend a Brāhman guest by offering human flesh as food. He again cursed him. The cannibal in him was now roused and poor Śakti became the first victim; and later on his younger brothers also were devoured. Vasiṣṭha bore the grief when he learnt that Śakti's wife Adrśyanti was pregnant, so that there would be progeny to continue the line. It so happened that, as he returned to his abode with the daughter-in-law, they happened to encounter the cannibal king. Adrśyanti got terrified, but Vasiṣṭha put down the demon by a huṅkāra, which ended the curse actually and restored the distressed king to normal life and thinking. Coming back to his old self, Kalmāṣapāda paid due homage to Vasiṣṭha and, later on, requested him to beget a son on his queen Madayanti, which extraordinary procedure became necessary on account of a Brāhmaṇi's curse during his cursed life when he deprived her of her joy with the husband by devouring him. Thus we see that the Rakṣas who was set upon the depraved king was responsible for all the misery of Vasiṣṭha and the death of his sons.

Among the stories that centre round Viśvāmitra, that of Satyavrata Triśaṅku has somewhat pre-eminently caught the Purāṇic fancy.³⁰⁷ Trayyāruṇa was a king of the Ikṣvāku-race. His son was Satyavrata who got the appellation of Triśaṅku and was degraded to the condition of cāṇḍāla, or outcast. According to Vāyu-purāṇa he was banished by his father for his wickedness (adharma). The Brahma and Harivaṁśa detail his iniquity at length. He carried off the betrothed wife of a citizen, as the wedding ceremony was in progress. He was therefore banished by the father and directed to live among the śvapākas (dog-eaters). Vasiṣṭha did not intercede. Then there came a terrible famine in which Indra did not shower rain for twelve years. Viśvāmitra had left his wife and children in that country and gone to the shores of the sea for penance. In this situation, Satyavrata provided the flesh of deer for the sustenance of the family, suspending it upon a spreading fig-tree on the borders of the Ganges, that he might not subject them to the indignity of receiving at the hands of an outcast. Viśvāmitra's wife was even prepared to sell her middle son for a hundred cows, tying a collar round the neck, perhaps to proclaim him for sale (gale baddhvā). Satyavrata interceded and got him liberated; the boy came to be known as Gālava. Thus did Satyavrata spend the twelve years, proving all the while helpful to Viśvāmitra's family but bearing unrelenting hatred against Vasiṣṭha as the latter did not sympathise with him. Once while he had to hunt up food, and when game failed, he killed the cow of Vasiṣṭha. Whereupon, the preceptor denounced him as Triśaṅku, "one who has committed three sins," viz. displeasing the father, killing a cow and eating 306. Just when the offending king was about to apologise, Viśvāmitra directed the fiend to possess him, and by his supernatural powers incited both the parties to excesses. The prime cause for all this was the hostility between Vasiṣṭha and Viśvāmitra. The latter had asked the king to perform a sacrifice with him as priest, whereas Vasiṣṭha was the family priest. The king naturally preferred him. So Viśvāmitra was bent upon harassing both. Ibid. 176.4 and 15-22.

307. Viṣṇu IB 3.13-14, Brahma 7.97 to 8.23, Brahmāṇḍa III 63.77-114, Vāyu 88.78-116, Bhāgavata IX 7.4-5 etc. cf. Hari. 12.11 to 13.23.

flesh not previously consecrated. Returning from penance, Viśvāmitra was very much pleased with Triśaṅku's friendly services and pressed him to choose a boon. Satyavrata wished to be bodily elevated to Heaven. Viśvāmitra installed him on the throne and as all, including Vasiṣṭha, could see, celebrated a sacrifice and sent him bodily to heaven. It was seen in the foregoing pages how, according to the Rāmāyaṇa, Viśvāmitra was prepared to contend not only with one individual Vasiṣṭha, but with the whole host of the gods. When he was out to sacrifice for an outcast, the gods naturally did not heed for he was acting against Ṛta, established path. But he was determined to please them or have his own way by creating, by means of his supernatural powers, a different Indra and a different firmament with full stellar and planetary complement. The gods had but to acknowledge the force of his determination and compromise with him, with the result that Triśaṅku was left suspended in mid-air, forming a constellation in the southern hemisphere along with other new planets and stars created by Viśvāmitra. The Bhāgavata says admiringly that Triśaṅku is still visible in the sky (aydāpi divi drśyate). The Vāyu furnishes some further information. "Men acquainted with the Purāṇas recite these two stanzas: 'By the favour of Viśvāmitra, the illustrious Triśaṅku shines in heaven along with the gods, through the kindness of that sage. Slowly passes the lovely night in winter, embellished by the moon, decorated with three watches and ornamented with the constellation Triśaṅku.'"³⁰⁸ Triśaṅku is identified with the Orion, the three bright stars of his belt being the three śaṅkus, (stakes or pins) which form his name.

The Vasiṣṭha-Viśvāmitra feud reaches its climax in the story of Hariścandra, son of Satyavrata Triśaṅku. According to the Śunaśśepa legend related in the AB and other works, Vasiṣṭha and Viśvāmitra were high priests co-operating with the sacrifice performed by Hariścandra. It might then be a subsequent event in the life of that king, if not fabricated by the fertile imagination of the story-teller. The Mārkaṇḍeya-purāṇa³⁰⁹ expands the story at considerable length. One day 308.

"Atrāpyudāharantīmau ślokaṁ paurāṇikā janāḥ /
Viśvāmitraprasādena Triśaṅkur divi rājate /
Devais sārddham mahātejā'nugrahāt tasya dhimataḥ /
Śanair yātyabalā ramyā hemante candramanḍitā /
Alaṅkṛtā tribhūir bhāvais triśaṅkugrahabhūṣitā /

Vāyu 88.114-116.

Wilson's emendation niśā in the place of abalā is better, though he did not find ms. evidence therefor. But abalā yields no sense and has no antecedent in the text; it might be dyaus, but the epithet abalā is hardly appropriate. Wilson has yamaḥ for bhāvaiḥ. The Ānand ŚS. edition records no v.l. cf. Wilson's Translation of Viṣṇu, p. 372 footnote.

309. Mārka. cantos 7-9. This theme has been dramatised by Kṣeṁiśvara in his Caṇḍa-Kauśika (10th or 11th cent. A.D.). More imaginative is the title given to vernacular plays on the subject: Satya-Hariścandra. Popular impression now is that Viśvāmitra was a cruel sage and all that. How different from the Vedic Viśvāmitra, "heaven-born, favourite of the gods, great sage." (Mahan ṛṣir devajā devajūtaḥ. RV III 53.9). One is tempted to ask whether or to what extent, if at all, has the cause of Tauru been served by unbridled tradition, by the unscrupulous story-teller of Harikathā-performer, or even by the high handed poet. In fact Tauru has been at the mercy of these factors. Says a Subhāṣita—

He Rājāns tyajata sukavīpremanbandhe virodham
Śuddhā kīrtis sphurati bhavatām nūnam etatprasādāt //
Tuṣṭair baddham tad alaghu Raghuvāminas saaccaritam Ruṣṭair nītas tribhuvanajay! hāsyamārgam daśāsyah //

while Hariścandra was hunting he heard female lamentations, which proceeded "from the Sciences who were being mastered by the austere fervid sage Viśvāmitra and were crying out in alarm at his superiority." Hariścandra, as the defender of the distressed, went to the rescue, but Viśvāmitra was so provoked by his interference that the Sciences instantly perished and Hariścandra was reduced to a state of abject helplessness. Viśvāmitra demanded the sacrificial gift due to him as a Brāhman and the king offered him whatever he might choose to ask, 'gold, his own son, wife, body, life, kingdom, good fortune,' whatever was dearest. Viśvāmitra stripped him of his wealth and kingdom, leaving him nothing but a garment of bark and his wife and son. In a state of destitution, he left his kingdom and Viśvāmitra struck Śaibyā, the queen, with his staff to hasten her reluctant departure. To escape from his oppressor he proceeded to the holy city of Benares, but the relentless sage was waiting for him and demanded the completion of his gift. With bitter grief, wife and child were sold, and there remained only himself. Dharma, the god of justice, appeared in the form of a hideous and offensive Cāṇḍāla and offered to buy him. Notwithstanding the exile's repugnance and horror, Viśvāmitra insisted upon the sale, and Hariścandra was carried off "bound, beaten, confused and afflicted," to the abode of the cāṇḍāla. He was then employed at the grave-yard to collect clothes etc. from the dead bodies. In this horrid place and degrading work he spent twelve months. His wife then came to the cemetery to perform the obsequies of her son, who had died of serpent bite. They recognised each other and resolved to die upon the funeral pyre of their son, though Hariścandra hesitated to take away his own life without the consent of the master. After all was prepared, he gave himself up to meditation on Viṣṇu. The gods then arrived, headed by Dharma and accompanied by Viśvāmitra. Dharma entreated him to refrain from his intention, and Indra informed him "that he, his wife, and son, had conquered heaven by their good works." Hariścandra declared that he could not go to heaven without the permission of his master the cāṇḍāla. Dharma then revealed himself. When this difficulty was removed, Hariścandra objected to go to heaven without his faithful subjects. This request was granted by Indra and after Viśvāmitra had inaugurated Rohitāśva, the king's son, to be his successor, Hariścandra, his friends and followers, all ascended in company to heaven. There he was induced by the sage Nārada to boast of his merits and this led to his expulsion from heaven. As he was falling he repented for his fault and was forgiven. His downward course was arrested and he and his followers dwell in any aerial city, which, according to popular belief, is still visible occasionally in mid-air.

The indignation of Vasiṣṭha at Viśvāmitra's insatiableness produced a quarrel, in which their mutual imprecations changed them to two birds, the Śārāli (āḍi) and the Baka.³¹⁰ In these forms they fought for a considerable term until Brahma

310. Āḍi is a kind of heron, and Baka is the crane, the former being of a portentous height of 2,000 yojanas (= 18000 miles) and the latter of 3090 yojanas. Their very movements would shake the earth, how much more when they pull up their energy to kill each other. Ref. Mārka. ch. 9. See also MOST I p. 379 et seq and p. 386 f.

interposed and reconciled them. The Bhāgavata³¹¹ alludes to this story, in its notice of Hariścandra.

This section may be concluded with two impressions : 1. The Vasiṣṭha-Viśvāmitra rivalry, though a thing of the ancient past, is a reality in the conception of the Purāṇas. In fact, it is never doubted. Similarly, it was the belief that Viśvāmitra was born in a Kṣatriya race, but elevated himself to Brāhmanhood by penance. 2. Secondly, under cover of tradition, new stories have sprung up to illustrate the mutual hatred of the two sages. The story of Saudāsa Kalmāṣapāda took its origin in the BD³¹² but expanded with fanciful structure in Mbh. and the Purāṇas. The first record of Triśaṅku story was in the Epics (Rām. and Mbh.) and further elaborated in the various Purāṇas. The story of Hariścandra germinating in the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa, in which the sages are not enemies if not friends of each other, transformed itself into a classic as it were, to depict the very climax of their enmity. Justification for all this fabrication is that unshakable, mysterious TRADITION !

VIII

RECENT OPINIONS

In the study of the life history of the sages Vasiṣṭha and Viśvāmitra, who are reputed personalities from Vedic times, we have naturally to delve deep into the literature of the Vedas for a true understanding. As time advanced and tradition spread through diverse channels, it is natural that the original structure of their story got hazy if not distorted. John Muir very effectively advocated a return to the study of the originals. He said :³¹³ "The Vedic hymns being far more ancient than the Epic and Purāṇic complications must be more trustworthy guides to a knowledge of the remotest Indian antiquity. While the epic poems and the Purāṇas no doubt embody numerous ancient traditions, yet these have been freely altered according to the caprice or dogmatic views of later writers, and have received many purely fictitious additions. The Vedic hymns on the contrary have been preserved unchanged from a very remote period and exhibit a faithful reflection of the social, religious and ecclesiastical condition of the age in which they were composed and of the feelings which were awakened by contemporary occurrences. As yet there was no conscious perversion or colouring of facts for dogmatic or sectarian purposes.... It is here therefore that we may look for some light on the real relations between Vasiṣṭha and Viśvāmitra."

311. Triśaṅkayo Hariścandro Viśvāmitra-Vasiṣṭhayoh /
Yannimittam abhūd yuddham pakṣiṇor bahuvārṣikam // Bhā. IX 7.6.

312. BD VI 23 and 34. The germ of the story is however seen in the TS and the Brāhmaṇas, which depict that Vasiṣṭha's sons were killed by the Saudāsas. The sage then saw the rite of forty-nine nights etc. to obtain progeny as well as to take revenge against the Saudāsas. * Vasiṣṭho hataputro 'kāmayata vindeya prajāṃ abhi Saudāsāu bhaveyam iti' cf. TS VII 4.7. KB IV.8, PB IV 7.3, etc.

313. MOST I p. 318. cf. Max Müller ASL p. 37.

The whole inquiry centres round the following issues :

- (1) The identity of the two sages.
- (2) Had Viśvāmītra any claim for kingship by birth or by acquisition ?
- (3) Did Vasiṣṭha and Viśvāmītra ever hate each other ?

It is acknowledged on all hands that both Vasiṣṭha and Viśvāmītra were highly esteemed as Ṛṣis, seers of entire Maṇḍalas of the Ṛgveda. That one was a Brahmr̥ṣi and the other a Rājārṣi promoted to the rank of Brahmar̥ṣi is an idea quite foreign to the Veda. Regarding Viśvāmītra, the Vedic Index says³¹⁴ "There is no trace of his kingship in the RV, but the Nirukta (II 24) calls his father Kuśika, a king ; the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa (VII 18.9) refers to Śunaśśeṣa as succeeding to the lordship of the Jahnuṣ as well as the divine lore of the Gāthins, and the Pañcaviṃśa Brāhmaṇa (xxi.12.2) mentions Viśvāmītra as a king. But there is no real trace of this kingship of Viśvāmītra. It may probably be dismissed as mere legend with no more foundation at most than that Viśvāmītra was of a family which once had been royal. But even this is doubtful."³¹⁵

Regarding the strife between Vasiṣṭha and Viśvāmītra, Oldenberg holds that it "is not to be found in the Ṛgveda. On the other hand, Geldner is hardly right in finding in RV a compressed account indicating the rivalry of Śakti, Vasiṣṭha's son, with Viśvāmītra, the acquisition by Viśvāmītra of special skill in speech and the revenge of Viśvāmītra who secured the death of Śakti by Sudās's servants."³¹⁶ These pictures, we have seen, were only supplied by tradition,³¹⁷ and not by the text of RV. As we look back at the Veda, through the colourful foreground of legendary matter provided by later literature, the mind is so caught up by the tales and hence somewhat vitiated in its appreciation of the Vedic origin. One is apt to be guided away by high authorities like the Brhaddevatā and the Sarvānukramanī when they introduce the Ṛgvedic passages in an attractive legendary setting. These works themselves are ancient and moreover they have the unassailable TRADITION to inspire credence. Thus in the Vasiṣṭha-Viśvāmītra relationship, to quote tradition or even to imagine it will not be subject to any doubt. So eminent a seer was Vasiṣṭha, heaven-born ; how ever could a mortal like Viśvāmītra, himself seer though, vie with him ? In a controversy, or a philosophic discussion in a sacrificial assembly (sadas), Viśvāmītra could not stand the attack of Vasiṣṭha's son the learned Śakti, with the result that he was silenced. Bearing a grudge against Śakti, Viśvāmītra bided his time and with the help of the Saudāsas brought about his death. Now Vasiṣṭha the aggrieved father had to take notice of it all ; hence, he saw the Rākṣoghna-sūkta or perform a rite of forty-nine nights to avenge the death of his son or sons.³¹⁸ This is a perfectly reasoned

314. VI, Vol. II, p. 311.

315. Criticised by Pargiter. AIHT pp. 12-13.

316. VI Vol. II, p. 275 f.

317. e.g. BD VI 34 (iti vai Śrutih), Sarvā. p. 107 (prāhur itihāsam purāṇanam) or, p. 133 (āśām prāvāpīntvam tu kathāsu parikalpyate); etc.

318. See supra note.

story but the regret of the inquirer will be when in the Vedic Text, he neither finds even a remote reference to the alleged events nor anything pointing to them in the very mantras which are set in their framework. The meaning of the mantras bears no relevancy to the fancied story.³¹⁹ The Śakti-Viśvāmītra controversy is superimposed on RV III 53.15-16; and the killing of Śakti on RV VII 32.26—these are sufficient to illustrate the above contention that the later stories have had no foundation in the original text. Then tradition alone is their resort; and tradition is mysterious and has to be regarded for the very reason, perhaps!

Regarding the veracity of the Vasiṣṭha-Viśvāmītra strife, the findings of Maurice Bloomfield are very valuable.³²⁰ In his R̥gveda Repetitions, he has pointed out how as many as four consecutive verses are common to the Maṇḍalas of Vasiṣṭha and Viśvāmītra: (VII 2.8-11 = III 4.8-11). Both are Āpri-hymns. Besides, the two Books share no less than 14 lines in common. Speaking of groups of stanzas repeated in the R̥gveda, Bloomfield observes: "There comes to mind in this connection the traditional hostility of the Viśvāmītras, the reputed authors of the 3rd book and the Vasiṣṭhas, the reputed authors of the 7th book. This centres about the so-called Vasiṣṭha-dveṣīnyah (RV III 53.21-14) which are supposed to contain a curse of the Viśvāmītras against the Vasiṣṭhas. As early as TS 3.1.7.3; 3.4.11.3, Viśvāmītra and Vasiṣṭha are opposing parties in a Vihava³²¹ or conflicting call upon the gods. Roth and Geldner regard the traditional hostility of the two ṛṣi clans as old. But the hymns do not express it. At least, it is strange that their two Āpri-hymns III 4 and VII 2 share no less than four stanzas word for word. We should expect diversity there if anywhere."

Having started so well with almost a pledge that one has to look back to the Vedas³²² for the truth of the legends, one finds the versatile scholar J. Muir succumb to the influence of the legends narrated in later literature. Relying on the veracity of these he brought to bear quite serious thought over the transformation which had come upon the alleged Vasiṣṭha-Viśvāmītra feud in successive ages and put forward certain generalisations like "contests between the Brāhmanas and Kṣatriyas" apparently for superiority.³²³ The contests however ended in glorifying the qualities of the Brāhman or the principles and modes of life for which he stood. In recent times, F. E. Pargiter pursued the study, especially of the Purāṇas, on the same lines and, postulated the theory of two traditions in ancient history and legend, viz. the Brāhmana tradition and Kṣatriya tradition. In so doing he laid at the former's door the blame of distorting facts to suit its own purpose of maintaining

319. Supra and notes 38 and 155-157.

320. Vide Bloomfield: RVR (HOS vols. 20 and 24) pp.xviii, 492 and footnote; 646-47 also Max Muller ASL p. 465.

321. Supra n.36. Viśvāmītra and Jamadagni had a contest with Vasiṣṭha, Jamadagni saw the Vihavya hymn (RV X 126.1) and drew away all the power and strength of the adversary. Vihavya is the seer of the Hymn according to the Anukramaṇi.

322. MOST I 318.

323. A whole chapter is written on this (MOST I ch. IV pp. 296-400). Expressions here and there like incidents being "coloured by the Brāhmanical prepossessions of the narrator" (p. 359) indicate the perspective which cannot be described as truly historical.

the importance of the Brāhmana in the social structure of the age.³²⁴ To this end, he made capital out of the legend of Vasiṣṭha-Viśvāmitra relationship (chapter I). He would have rendered signal service to ancient history and tradition if, instead of eking out the subtle but harmful distinctions in tradition, he had concentrated on proclaiming the slender foundation on which such an undesirable structure of hatred was built.

It is necessary to meet the arguments and theories advanced in the book : ANCIENT INDIAN HISTORICAL TRADITION, but it may be permissible to offer some remarks on the perspective of the dissertation as a whole. Pargiter has made a profound study of the Purāṇas. He perceives two currents of tradition, the Brāhmanical and the Kṣatriya ; the former reflected in the Samhitās, the Brāhmaṇas and other Vedic books, and the latter reflected mostly in the Epics and the Purāṇas. One cannot deny the existence, from time immemorial, of a twofold tradition in any given age. The version of a story, for instance, among the literate based on books and the version among the less literate common folk which is based on hearsay : these two represent this twofold tradition. But Pargiter has viewed this most natural sociological aspect in a wrong perspective inasmuch as he has dubbed the twofold stream as two distinct entities, not infrequently, motivated by considerations of mutual exclusiveness among Brāhmaṇas and Kṣatriyas. In this kind of interpretation, he takes inspiration evidently, as pointed out above, from Dr. John Muir who, in his ORIGINAL SANSKRIT TEXTS, has developed a doctrine, par excellence, of Brāhmaṇa-Kṣatriya hostility. Such rivalry and conflict between individuals may have existed in ancient times ; but they were not part of anybody's or any group's beliefs and duties. Certain circumstances forced certain happenings, but it will be a great mistake to suppose that a vein or an undercurrent of rivalry and feud always subsisted these happenings from age to age. This is a precept which does incalculable harm to the student of history and to the historical method of cultural investigation. The charge, for instance, is that the Brāhmanical priest dominated and got on with gifts etc. from kings. Be it so, what harm ? The conditions were such. The social codes were written by Brāhmanical priests, quite true. But why does the Brāhmanical priest write a thing which is not for the welfare of society and which is not acceptable thereto ? In the revolutions of ages, changes are inevitable ; that is the Law of the Universe. The āstika and the nāstika, like good and bad, have always been co-existent and thrive on each other, really. Every system or science has had supporters and dissenters, and we think each is strong as such, because of friends and foes. If we pile up the brick of the same size and symmetry one upon the other in one order only, the pile will 324. Pargiter AIHT (1923). The two traditions explained pp. 6-7 ; a ruthless attack on what he calls the brāhmanic tradition characterises the whole work (see pp. 10-11, chs. II and V). The author's study of ancient Indian literature has betrayed want of appreciation. To meet his arguments is outside the purview of this study, indeed. Suffice it to mention that Pargiter's conclusions are not, in general, commended by scholars. cf. Winternitz : HIL p. 521 n.3. "I doubt, however, whether we are justified in drawing the line between the Kṣatriya tradition and the brahmanical tradition as definitely as is assumed by Pargiter." cf. again, p. 523 n.2. In earlier years, Pargiter's views were contested by Prof. Keith : JRAS (1914) 1021 ff., (1915) 328 ff.

topple down with one push ; but pile them lengthwise and breadthwise, the wall gains in resistance. That is fundamental law. But if we try to dissect and place the lengthwise and breadthwise bricks separately, where is the wall? It is the first duty of man to visualise this unchangeable Law of Rta or Cosmic Order, with a desire for knowledge for its own sake. There he should try to separate them. The story of Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde (R. L. Stevenson) is an instance in point. Genius will turn to perversity if its sharp edge is turned to selfish use. There have been frantic attempts in Vedic times to grapple the Unknown. Severest penance and will power have challenged the divine custodians of that hidden TRUTH, who have now and then relented, but on pain of the head splitting into a thousand pieces if the secret is divulged. There has been rivalry even among gods for this knowledge as is borne out by the story of Dadhyañe, to whom the Sun-god imparted the "madhuvidyā" (nectar of knowledge). Asked by the Aśvins, Dadhyañe explained the pledge and begged forgiveness. But the deft surgeons of heaven grafted a horse's head on the sage and persuaded him to give out the secret knowledge through the horse's mouth. The object achieved, they replaced the original head. The sage, however, did not escape the Sun's wrath. That apart, experiments with truth, ridden to extremes, are fraught with danger to humanity. This does not require elaboration, living as we do in this Atomic Age.

Should we then eschew knowledge and feel complacent with the maxim 'Ignorance is bliss'? No. We should gain knowledge ; but it should be subject to strict discipline, with passions and emotions sublimated into that stratum of peace and realisation of one's oneness with the Universe. Otherwise we are let down. In a miniature form Muir and Pargiter have propounded the twin traditions and unduly emphasised their apparent incompatibility, perhaps not realising that such an attempt will leave deep furrows in that vulnerable body called Society, which would be difficult to level up.³²⁵ There have been upheavels in the past in our Bharatavarṣa ; everytime, society has survived and stood on its tradition, with a reorientation needed by the times. It has emerged with a new and bright outlook. The historian's duty, however, is to unravel the strings, but never to pull them !

Taking into consideration so many activities on the part of the sages Vasiṣṭha and Viśvāmitra, it appears marvellous for one individual to achieve so much in one life-time. As it is common in the legends, a Ṛṣi does penance to please Indra ordinarily for a thousand years. Viśvāmitra did penance, according to the Rāmāyaṇa, for thousands of years, in all the four quarters put together. Vasiṣṭha is the priest of the Ikṣvāku race. Though once, perhaps at the beginning of his career, he had to give up his body on account of Nimi's curse, he was before long reborn and filled the same office as priest of the Ikṣvākus with all due respect and authority. Ever since he remained immortal down to the reign of Śrī Rāma, son of Daśaratha. Moreover, he laid the whole world under a debt of gratitude, according to the Viṣṇu-purāṇa (III 3.9), by being the redactor of the Veda in the eighth Dvāpara.³²⁶ In the Rāmāyaṇa, both the sages are connected with the Ikṣvāku kings Triśaṅku, Ambariṣa, Sudās and Daśaratha who are, from one another, separated by very long intervals, being 28th, 44th, 49th and 60th descendants respectively from the founder. The legends therefore take it for granted that the sages, by virtue of their austerities, were men of 'miraculous longevity,' 'possessed of a vitality altogether superhuman.'³²⁷ The common conception is that these holy sages are immortal; they reside in heaven or somewhere in the Himālayan region, but invisible to mortals. Now and then they would descend upon the earth to bless the Believer. This tenet affords safe anchor for the popular mind; for, what is impossible for the gods and saints of the golden Past?

325. Pargiter, it may be recalled, was a member of the Indian Civil Service.

Or, there is, to solve this riddle, the other expedient of counting a number of Vasiṣṭhas and Viśvāmitras. Thus Pargiter discovers more than nine Vasiṣṭhas and three or more Viśvāmitras.³²⁸ It is curious thing, however, that the old sages have mostly been designated by their gotras as it is the case even today in some tracts of India where people are known by their surnames. In the RV also, we are familiar with expressions Viśvāmitrāḥ, Vasiṣṭhāḥ, Jamadagnayaḥ etc. They and their descendants are seers of hymns in the various "family-books." It is reasonable to think that those that came after the great Ṛṣis scrupulously kept up their traditions and distinguishing characteristics. But through centuries of life envisaged by the various incidents connected with the two sages, it would be unsound to count the number of them involved. And so far as the people are concerned it has been immaterial how many they were; for their exemplary characteristics were important for posterity. The saintliness and forbearance, for instance, of Vasiṣṭha; the dynamic activity and universal friendliness of Viśvāmitra; the one an embodiment of divine grace and the other an apostle of Human Endeavour (Puruṣakāra).

IX

SUMMARY

1. The RV. presents Vasiṣṭha and Viśvāmitra as great sages who were leaders of their respective clans and who established sound traditions. They are seers of maṇḍalas; favourites of the gods Varuṇa and Indra respectively; endowed with supernatural powers such as to render rivers fordable etc. Both befriended, and were priests of, Sudās, evidently on different occasions. Vasiṣṭha saved Sudās

326 ¹ The Vedas have already been divided 28 times in the course of the present or Vaiṣvata Manvantara; this division has always taken place in the Dvāpara age of each system of four yugas. In the first Dvāpara, Brahmā Svayambhū himself divided them; in the sixth, Mṛtyu (Death or Yama); whilst in the eighth Dvāpara, it was Vasiṣṭha who was the Vyāsa or divider. MOST I, p. 336.

327. Ibid p. 362.

328. AHT Ch. XVIII. It is unconvincing but amusing to see Pargiter hunt up the personal names of the several Vasiṣṭhas, Devarāj, Āpava, Atharvanidhi I and II, Śreṣṭhabhāj, Suvarcas etc. A similar attempt at unmaking different Viśvāmitras by their names proved futile ch. XXI. The one name suggested i.e. Viśvāratha is more likely an attribute than a name. See supra.

from a disaster in his Battle with the Ten Kings (Dāśarājña), by steering him across the Paruṣṇi before being overpowered by the enemies. Viśvāmitra similarly led the same chieftan across the confluence of Vipāś and Śutudrī; and performed a thousand-offer-sacrifice before a distinguished gathering of the Āṅgirasas, the Bhojas and others. Both sages expressed themselves powerfully against enemies and constantly invoked the protection of the gods to be saved from their malignant attacks.

2. The first and only mention of a discord between them in the later Samhitās is in the TS. It was a dispute between Vasiṣṭha on the one part and Viśvāmitra and Jamadagni on the other, regarding a 'conflicting call (vi-hava) of the gods', as Bloomfield puts it. The text however says that in that dispute, Jamadagni saw the "vihavya" hymn (RV X 128.1)³²⁹ and drew away all the strength of the adversary. The TS also records, for the first time about Vasiṣṭha's bereavement caused by the death of his son or sons (hataputraḥ) and about his desire to wreak vengeance against the Saudāsas. On the other hand, the importance of both the sages for the Sacrifice is stressed. The SV and AV do not bear any sign of the rivalry; the latter simply praises them uniformly.

3. The Brāhmaṇas further emphasise the contribution to the sacrificial system made by the two sages, who together officiated at Hariścandra's sacrifice (AB). Vasiṣṭha and Viśvāmitra are the Mind and Speech or Breath and Ear of the sacrifice; they are, to the sacrifice, like two wheels to a chariot. At first Vaiṣṭhas alone were to be Brāhmā priests but later anyone who knew the job (ŚB). There is constant reference to Vasiṣṭha's bereavement and the sacrifice which he performed or the sāmans (Janitra) which he saw, to obtain progeny and to defeat the Saudāsas. PB is the only work to speak of a four-day rite of victory (sañjaya) which Viśvāmitra, king of the Jahnus (Jahnūnām rājā) performed to obtain the kingdom. Viśvāmitra's martial spirit and sportsmanship are adverted to in connection with the Krośa and Rohita-Kāliya sāmans.

It is remarkable that nowhere does any Brāhmaṇa say or suggest that Viśvāmitra was responsible for Vasiṣṭha's misfortune.

4. Yāska does not refer to any hatred between Vasiṣṭha and Viśvāmitra. Explaining the name Vipāś, he says that the river got the name because of her loosening the bonds when Vasiṣṭha wanted to drown himself in her waters.

It is in the Bṛhaddevatā that the first reference is made to the Vasiṣṭha-dveṣiṇyaḥ (Vasiṣṭha-haters) and an injunction that they should neither be recited nor heard on pain of the head splitting into hundred parts etc. Poignant reference is made to the calamity which befell Vasiṣṭha in that King Sudāsa, turning a demon, killed his hundred sons. Vasiṣṭha's pedigree has been described as also his funny experiences in a dream. There is an explicit statement that Viśvāmitra, having ruled the Earth, attained the status of a Brahmarṣi and also got a hundred and one sons. Viśvāmitra is commended as a universal friend; his conversation with the Rivers (Vipāś and Śutudrī) is stated as also his discomfiture at the hands of Śakti.

329. According to Sarvā. Vihavya is the Ṛṣi of the hymn.

The Sarvā. gives the pedigree of Viśvāmitra and briefly refers to the conversation with the Rivers; does not at all mention the controversy with Śakti. There is a brief reference to Śunaśśēpa being adopted by Viśvāmitra as his son and named Devarāta. Sarvā. relates for the first time the incident of Śakti thrown into fire by Saudāsas, whereas the incident is not recognised by the Tāṇḍaka (PB). Commentator Śiṣya, however, elaborates the Śakti-controversy as well as Śakti-murder.

Commentator Durgācārya refuses to comment on the Vasiṣṭha-dveṣiṇyaḥ, because he is a Kāpiṣṭhala Vasiṣṭha. There have been instances of scribes having omitted that portion of the text and commentary as noticed by Max Müller and Roth.³³⁰

Nītimañjarī says that Śakti survived the flames!

Vasiṣṭha-Viśvāmitra hostility, thus, acquired wide publicity and implicit belief by the time of BD (400 B.C.), so much so that society was prone even to expunge from the Vedic text the few verses known as Vasiṣṭha-dveṣiṇyaḥ. (So vehement is the protest in BD IV 117-120). Justice requires to be done to Viśvāmitra also.

5. In the conception of the Epics and the Purāṇas, the belief in the Vasiṣṭha-Viśvāmitra hatred has been firmly established. The Rāmāyaṇa describes only the process of Viśvāmitra's elevation to the status of a Brahmarṣi. All revengeful stories are elaborated in the Mbh. and further in the Purāṇas. Such inveterate hatred is fancied that Vasiṣṭha and Viśvāmitra curse each other to become Āḍi and Baka (a kind of birds of portentous height) and then fight as such for years when only Brahmā could come and pacify them with suitable admonition. General impression would be that Vasiṣṭha patiently bore all the insults and onslaughts of Viśvāmitra, whereas the latter prompted by jealousy at Vasiṣṭha's greatness always sought an opportunity to attack him. He even tried to kill him; only the River Sarasvatī tricked him at the risk of being cursed. Finally Viśvāmitra's cruel treatment of Hariścandra is phenomenal. If all that did happen, it is hard to develop any sense of reverence to the Sage.

But a perusal of the above historical investigation will prove that later literature does not reflect the truth. There has been so much of concoction and distortion. There is no doubt that all that was done, by whomsoever that was responsible, with bad taste and unworthy motive. Let us now look at the facts and realise that the two sages were not at all enemies of each other.

6. Recent opinion has on the one hand observed the hollowness of what is called the traditional hostility between Vasiṣṭha and Viśvāmitra, as revealed by a study of the most ancient literature; and on the other, postulated that the same reflects a continued conflict between the Brāhmaṇas and Kṣatriyas to gain supremacy over each other and that later literature has not done justice to facts.

7. Conclusion : (a) Vasiṣṭha and Viśvāmitra, already sages of high repute, in the comprehension of the RV, were not enemies of each other. Both of them, being eminent priests of the foremost kings of the day, had common enemies to contend with in the course of their expansion in India.

(b) There have been definite instances of their co-operation for common good. Witness the system of sacrifices which they perfected.

(c) Should there have been any differences between them, they must relate to some sacrificial technique or to a too personal jealousy at each other's success in their support to kings. But it was never such as to cause rivalry and hatred between clans and races.

(d) It lacks vedic authority to say that Viśvāmitra was a Kṣatriya elevated to Brāhmaṇhood. Apart from orthodox tradition, researches point to the fact that the caste held sway over the people during a very late period of the Rgvedic Age.³³¹ As Vasiṣṭha and Viśvāmitra belonged to the hoary past even at the time of Rgvedic compilation, it will be short-sighted to attribute any varṇa to them. In the words of Bloomfield, the RV presupposes 'a long antecedent activity' and represents 'the mixed final precipitate of a later time.'³³² Even if in that remote age they did observe the distinction of varṇas, it was only one of profession and not of birth.³³³

(e) To make Viśvāmitra responsible for Vasiṣṭha's misfortune is unjust, in the absence of any tangible evidence. In later fabrications they have been allowed to wreak vengeance against each other, sufficiently. They are quits.

(f) Vasiṣṭha is saintly, is an embodiment of all that is best in man and god; therefore he is Vasiṣṭha. Viśvāmitra is brilliant, an embodiment of Human Endeavour (Puruṣakāra), a self-made Yogin and friend to all. It behoves us to transcend jealousy, hatred and acrimony, and rise to heights of sympathy, grace and good-will.

331. HIL p. 66.

332. RVR p. 646.

333. Mbh. XII 188.10.

Na viśeṣo'sti varṇānām sarvaṁ brāhmaṇam idaṁ jagat /
Brahmaṇā pūrvavarṇam hi karmabhir varṇatām gatam //

"A book that is shut is but a block"

CENTRAL ARCHAEOLOGICAL LIBRARY

GOVT. OF INDIA
Department of Archaeology
NEW DELHI

Please help us to keep the book clean and moving.
